ASSURES CROCKER A FAIR TRIAL

"George U. Crocker places the citizens of this county under a grave accusation when he avers that they are so prejudiced against him that a jury would not give him a fair trial," declared District Attorney Pelletier in his argument before Judge Stevens to-day against a change of venue in the trial of Crocker on the charge that he used bribery in connection with the breaking of his father's will.

Mr. Pelletier called Crocker's father a "bigot" and declared that he didn't know but the Catholic people owed George U. Crocker a debt of gratitude in breaking the will of a man who was so narrow that he put a clause in the document declaring that no money was to be given to a Catholic church or hospital.

"Figurehead" on Commission.

Lawyer Charles F. Choate, representing Crocker, followed Pelletier, arguing that Boston people were prejudiced as a result of recent political fights and that Crocker would not have a fair show in this county. He finished shortly before 11 o'clock. Judge Stevens took the same under advisement and will render his decision later. It is the first time that such a case, in a criminal matter, has ever been passed on in this State, and the outcome is eagerly awaited by many people.

The district attorney's address was to the effect that the court would see to it that Crocker had a fair trial in this county, and that if the case were removed to another county it would be a reflection on the courts here.

"People in other parts of the State read the Boston newspapers and they know as well as we do what is going on in Boston," said Mr. Pelletier. "We are not in neighbors now, as formerly, but strangers. I want to say in all politeness and kindness that yesterday it appeared that George U. Crocker was the whole Finance Commission, and from the gist of the evidence I was led to believe that we are trying the Finance Commission.

"But Mr. Crocker was a very small part of that commission. Two men stood out prominently—Nathan Matthews and John A. Sullivan—and the others were mere figureheads.

Points to City Election.

"Is the Finance Commission hated? They got through Plan Two. They convicted McCullough, Harris and several others—all cases in which they dug up the evidence. They showed that the Superior Court Judges of this county stood behind the Finance Commission and sentenced all of these men.

"Take the election last year. Storrow was defeated by only 2,000 votes. It is pretty hard to say in such a case as that, or a boss who can put his name in a jury box when the 100,000 voters the man votes out by nearly 2,000 votes.

"In the affidavit read yesterday of George U. Crocker's life you see his religion and his education, but nothing is said of his politics. I shall take it for granted that he is a Republican.

"Does it seem reasonable that out of 100,000 men who can be called for jury duty that twelve men cannot be found who are fair in their judgment? The theory of this defendant is that criticism should be made of such investigation as was made by the Finance Commission. If this is so, every Boss in making the most vital mistake that he can make in life, when he criticises the different boards. This is a fatal mistake, equal to this defendant. Every one will hate Governor Foss. He will be defeated when he comes up for election.

J. B. CONNOLLY ON MARATHON

James B. Connolly, the short story writer and athlete, will write for the Sunday AMERICAN to-morrow a graphic article on the annual Marathon run of the Boston Athletic Association on Patriots' Day.

Mr. Connolly possesses a graphic narrative style which has made the name famous among both news and fiction writers of to-day. He will bring to bear on the subject of the Marathon run his wide general knowledge of athletics and his intimate acquaintance with local conditions. As a native of Boston he has followed the B. A. A. Marathons for years and is familiar with the course, the conditions and the contestants.

Mr. Connolly's article will be published exclusively in the Sunday AMERICAN and will be succeeded by no other article dealing with this important athletic subject.

It will be one of the many interesting features of the Sunday AMERICAN to-morrow.

Be sure to read about the coming Marathon as "Jimmy" Connolly forecasts it.

About the Crocker Will Case

Charles F. Choate, Jr., his client, George U. Crocker, cannot have a fair trial in Suffolk County because of "racial, political and religious prejudice." Mr. Choate asks that Crocker be tried in some other county, on an indictment alleging an unlawful act in this county.

Many prominent men have filed affidavits in which they say they believe Crocker cannot get a fair trial in this county.

District Attorney Pelletier takes issue with them.

What Mr. Choate has to say on this subject is of interest and importance to every citizen of the county. What Mr. Pelletier says in reply should be of equal interest and importance.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN WILL TO-MORROW CONTAIN A VERBATIM REPORT OF THE ARGUMENTS OF CHOATE AND PELLETIER. THERE WILL BE A BIG DEMAND FOR THIS ISSUE OF THE SUNDAY AMERICAN. TAKE NO CHANCES. PLACE YOUR ORDER IN ADVANCE TO-DAY.

WHEELER GIVEN UP BY SURETY

Warren S. Wheeler, of the firm of Wheeler & Shaw, former Swaf agents for the North American Rubber Company, who with his partner, Stillman Shaw, was arrested by the federal authorities charged with using the mails illegally to sell North American Rubber stock, was surrendered by his bondsman. Wheeler has been out on bail since his arrest nearly a week ago. Wheeler was surrendered at the Federal building at 12 o'clock. His surety was Mrs. Lillian H. Butler.

Mrs. Butler explained that she had acted as surety only temporarily. She is Wheeler's landlady in Brookline.

New bail, $5,000, was furnished by John B. Pilling, a shoe manufacturer of Lowell, and Wheeler was allowed to go.

DRUGGIST SEEKS DEATH BY POISON

Morris Bailey, a druggist at No. 853 Main street, Cambridge, tried to kill himself by swallowing a quantity of morphine in his store. He was rushed to the Relief Hospital where his mother saw him and had a short talk. "He was tired of life," the mother told the police. "He had been too long hours. He thought it would be easier to swallow a dose of morphine and sleep his life away."

Bailey went to his store at Main and Austin streets as usual. His son went into the store about 8 o'clock and did not see his father about.

"Hello, father—hello!" cried the son, but there was no response.

Then the young man began an investigation. He found his father on the floor behind the prescription counter, unconscious.

The son notified the police. Bailey was placed in a police ambulance and hurried to the hospital. His condition was found to be critical.

CATCH WRONG MAN AS SLAYER SUSPECT

The police of Station 4 thought they had under arrest Abel Hadad, the man who shot and killed Mrs. Elizabeth Farill in Quincy on Wednesday, until residents of Quincy who knew the murderer looked at the prisoner and declared he was not the fugitive.

The prisoner had the same name as the murderer, and the police thought he looked like him. The prisoner's name was Joseph Hadad. He was arrested in a lodging house on Kneeland street.

The man was taken to Station 4 and held until Inspector Melhay of the Quincy police, accompanied by three men who know the Hadad who did the shooting, saw him.

"He's not the right one," the three men said, and Hadad was freed.

There is an impression in Quincy that the murderer killed himself by leaping into a quarry pool, as did Louis Reiteill, the first murderer.

KIDNAPED CUDAHY CURED; WILL MARRY

CHICAGO, April 15.—Edward Cudahy, the packer kidnaped son of E. A. Cudahy, will marry Miss Leonore Hrewer of San Francisco. A marriage license issued at Redlands, the Winter home of the Cudahys, recalled the announcement of the engagement on July 27, 1909, and how it was followed by a denial which later was denied a month after the engagement was announced the announcement was made that the wedding had been postponed indefinitely. Cudahy had tuberculosis, but is cured.

MAN DEAD, ONE DYING OF GAS

Two men, unconscious from the fumes of illuminating gas, were taken from the house, No. 2 Florence street, South End, early to-day.

One of the men died on the way to the City Hospital. The other man lies not been revived.

It is not believed at the hospital that he will recover, although the surgeons worked for hours in the effort to revive him.

Medical Examiner Timothy H. Leary has been called to view the body of the man who died. It was taken to the City Hospital morgue.

The police have been unable to learn the cause of the men or anything concerning them. No means of identifying the dead man were discovered in his clothing.

The two men were from the country. They came to the Florence House at No. 2 Florence street at 10:20 last night. They were given twenty-five to fifty years old. They said to Mrs. Margaret McNulty, the landlady: "We want a room for a few days."

They were shown a second-floor, sub-room, which they engaged.

"We are going out for a little while," said one of them to Mrs. McNulty. They left the house.

Quieted by Landlady.

They returned to the Florence House in half an hour. They were singing comic songs. They had a bottle of whiskey with them, as was subsequently shown.

They made so much noise that at midnight Mrs. McNulty rapped on their door and ordered them to keep quiet, which they did.

At 7 a. m. to-day Edward Steele, another lodger, smelled gas. He notified Mrs. McNulty. She traced it to the door of the new lodgers. The door was unlocked. Entering the room Mrs. McNulty found the two men unconscious on the bed. One was under the bedclothes, the other had no covering over him. A quart bottle, half full of whiskey, was on the bureau.

Gas Jet Half Open.

A gas was flowing from a half-opened jet. The room was filled with it. The window was closed.

Mrs. McNulty telephoned to police headquarters. The call was relayed to East Dedham street police station, whose ambulance took the dying men to the City Hospital. One of them died on the ambulance arrived at the hospital.

LOST IMMIGRANT GIRL AT KEENE, N. H.

The mystery of the disappearance of Katherine Cooney, who arrived on the Ivernia last Thursday and dropped out of sight when she left the pier, was cleared up when her brother-in-law, Michael Walsh, of 32 Hanson street, Dorchester Lower Mills, received a postal from the girl. The postal was from Keene, N. H., and stated that she was safe there with friends, having gone direct from the boat. Miss Cooney is twenty-one and came from County Cork, Ireland.

FORT REVERE, HULL, IS NOW EVACUATED

Fort Revere at Hull, for ten years one of the strongest posts in the Boston artillery district, was vacated by its garrison by orders from the War Department and becomes a sub-post of Fort Andrews on Peddock's Island. The fort was left in charge of three non-commissioned officers and will be in the charge of caretakers. The Eight-third Coast Artillery Company, commanded by Lieutenant T. L. Wilson, was sent to Fort Strong on Long Island.

M'CARTHY AND FOSS CONFER

Jeremiah J. McCarthy, surveyor of the port of Boston, loomed up as a prominent candidate for police commissioner of Boston when he called on Governor Foss and had a long talk with him on this matter.

The facts of the visit were given out in a statement by Dudley M. Holman, secretary of the Governor, who added that the Governor had formed no opinion as yet as to the reappointment of Mr. O'Meara or as to choosing a successor to him.

Mr. Holman's statement of the situation follows:

Minister for O'Meara.

"Governor Foss is receiving daily a large number of letters on the Police Commissionership of the city of Boston, some of them severely criticising Police Commissioner O'Meara, but largely in general terms, and others equally as warmly indorsing him.

"The sentiment among business men seems largely favorable to the reappointment of Mr. O'Meara, even among those who have at times criticised him quite largely.

"Delegations of clergymen have waited on the Governor, both in favor of and against Mr. O'Meara. Among the letters received to-day on this matter is one from a well known Boston clergyman, who has at times criticised the present Police Commissioner. This letter is as follows:

"Dictated, April 14, 1911

"My Dear Governor Foss:

"I have ventured to criticise Mr. O'Meara's career in a few particulars as Police Commissioner, and I think he has been open to some criticism.

"I believe, however, that he is a faithful, conscientious and able officer.

"I should like to be counted as strongly favoring his reappointment.

"Very sincerely yours,

Signed "ARTHUR LITTLE."

McCarthy Sees Foss.

Hon. Jeremiah J. McCarthy, surveyor of the port of Boston, has been advocated very strongly as a candidate to succeed Mr. O'Meara, and his name has met with a warm indorsement by leading business men, who believe he would be in every way qualified to fill the position of police commissioner.

"Surveyor McCarthy called on the Governor and discussed with him the reappointment of his name. The interview lasted about an hour.

"Several other candidates have been suggested by their friends, but the Governor has not in any way formed an opinion either in favor of the reappointment of Mr. O'Meara or in the choosing of his successor."

CAMBRIDGE TO HONOR LINCOLN VOLUNTEERS

Edward Barry and Commander-in-Chief John E. Gilbert, G. A. R., will review the parade at the head of the line. A reception will be tendered the surviving members of the first company of veterans.

A full list of the membership of this Back Bay women's club —which contains between 500 and 600 of the leading women of this and some other nearby cities—will be published in to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN. Experts will also comment on the propriety of issuing a license to the Chilton Club. It is something that all of the women readers of the AMERICAN will want to read.

SOUTH END GROUNDS, April 15.—Red Doolin's Phillies made their first appearance of the season here this afternoon. They were billed to meet the Rustlers in the first game of a series of five. Doolin's men were fresh from two straight victories over the New York Giants and, in consequence, were feeling cheerful. They are a likely looking bunch of ball players and from a team that is sure to make the leaders hustle.

The Rustlers are not uncomfortably cold. There was not enough threat of rain to keep the fans away, although the two defeats at the hands of Brooklyn had the effect of discouraging some of the more timid starters.

Cliff Curtis was Manager Tenney's first pitching choice. The darkness of the day did not bother Curtis either a bit, for his speed is all the harder to hit when it is dark. Manager Doolin decided on starting his candidate, but looked with favor on Bransna, the best left-hander.

President Horace Fogel of the Phillies came here with the team, and was shaking hands with Boston friends before the game.

MAYOR ASKS LIST OF WAR VETERANS

Mayor Fitzgerald has asked the heads of the city departments to send him a list of the Civil War veterans employed and those eligible for pensions under the new law passed recently by the Legislature. The Mayor says he will put the plan into operation as soon as he can find out just who are entitled to pensions.

Burns appealed and was held in $500 bonds.

STATE OFFICER FOR 20 YEARS PASSES AWAY

Family at Bedside When End Came to Veteran—Had Been Ill a Week.

William M. Olin, for the past twenty years Secretary of State of Massachusetts, died at 12:01 o'clock this afternoon at his home in Roxbury.

He had been ill one week with pneumonia. A bone of his recovery was given up two days ago.

At the bedside of Colonel Olin when he died were Edwin M. Olin, his son, Mrs. Caroline Olin of Philadelphia, a daughter, Mrs. J. H. Lathrop of Georgia, his sister, and George Olin of Amagansett, Long Island, a nephew.

Governor Takes Action.

The news of the death of Secretary Olin was received at the State House shortly after noon. The Governor directed that the national and State flags on all the State buildings be displayed at half-staff from now until after the hour of the funeral. The Governor sent the following message to the Legislature:

April 15, 1911.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives:

The Hon. William M. Olin, Secretary of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, died at his home in Boston this afternoon, April 15, at 12 o'clock, noon.

It is with most profound regret that I make this official announcement to your honorable bodies.

Although of Southern birth, he came from New England parentage, and most of his life was spent in these precincts.

Entering the army a boy as a private soldier, he served through the war with honor and distinction. His loyal services have been signally recognized by the trust reposed in him by the public. His ever flowing fund of good humor, his never perverted wit, and whether at a camp-fire of the Grand Army or in his chosen circle of friends he was the life of the party. His cordial friendliness toward all who were within the range of his influence.

As a citizen he was true to all the duties of civil life. He was called to the public service in 1890 in the office of Secretary of the Commonwealth. His predecessors had been men who had held the office for long terms and had always enforced the public confidence in a way that no one was the equal of any who had preceded him in point. He esteem is to pay to him a high but a deserved compliment.

Devotion to Duty.

It may be said of him in truth that none had enjoyed any fuller measure of public confidence, and no one had filled a wider sphere in the public life of the large circle in which he moved.

His devotion to his duties as Secretary of the Commonwealth was of the most scrupulous and painstaking. He was always at his post, and he expended the time nor strength in the performance of his duties.

He so endeared himself to all with whom he came in contact and he most faithfully met all the duties of his commonwealth.

I have directed that the national and State flags be lowered to half staff on all public buildings of the Commonwealth from now until after the funeral as a token of respect.

Your honorable bodies will doubtless take such action as may seem fitting. And I have the full confidence of any committee that may be appointed and confer with the committee as to the best method of showing respect to his memory.

EUGENE N. FOSS.

Speaker Walker's Tribute.

Speaker Walker made this statement upon learning of the death of Secretary of State Olin:

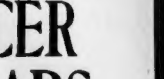
"I feel the death of Secretary Olin as a personal loss. A young man he lived in Worcester and was in my father's Sunday school class. They were close friends. I know of no more gentle and lovable man. The State House will never seem the same without him. He was a public servant, true and devoted to the public interests. One of the last times I saw him was during the recent nomination bill just reported in the House. I urged that he could not have lived to see that become a law."

William Mills Olin, Secretary of State, has been prominent in public and military affairs for many years. He has been Secretary of State since 1890.

Secretary Olin was born in 1845 in Warrenton, Ga., but received his education in Massachusetts in the lower schools of Worcester and graduated from High School of Leicester. When the Civil War broke out Mr. Olin joined the Fifteenth Massachusetts volunteer regiment and served as private from 1862 to 1865.

In 1869 he was married to Luella Woodworth Read.

IRELAND UNDER HOME RULE



The most interesting forecast of what Ireland shall be under Home Rule that has yet been made public was contained in a statement recently given to the London Daily Mail by Mr. Redmond, the leader of the Irish people. That remarkable utterance will be printed in full in to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN. It will stand careful reading from the first word of the first line to the last word of the last line. The views expressed by the Irish leader must disarm all further opposition to Home Rule for Ireland.

WEST ROXBURY CAR BARN BURNS

A loss of $5,000 was caused by fire late last night to the Beach street car barns of the Boston Elevated Railway at Washington and High streets, West Roxbury. Twenty-three cars stored in the one and one-half story wooden structure were badly scorched by the flames. The origin of the blaze is a mystery.

Patrolman O'Hearn of the West Roxbury substation discovered the fire. The firemen had a long run to the top of the hill and by the time they arrived the blaze had gained considerable headway. The most of the damage was on the building.

NAME NEW FISHING VESSEL GOV. FOSS

GLOUCESTER, April 15.—The finest and newest fishing schooner in the fleet is to be named for Governor Foss. This decision is the outcome of the Master Mariners' banquet held here recently at which the Lieutenant-Governor was invited, but no invitation was sent to the Chief Executive. The new schooner is being built by Parr & James. A letter was written asking the Governor's permission to give it his name, and Captain Thompson received an answer to-day. The Governor expressed his appreciation of the honor shown him, and said that he would consider himself pleased to have the finest and best-equipped schooner in the fleet named for him.

ASSIGNMENTS OF METHODISTS STAND

WATERBURY, Vt., April 15.—In an interview Bishop Neely, who is presiding over the Vermont conference, said in relation to the Bishop's complaints regarding the assignments made at the New England conference that there was nothing further to be said as the matter was settled. The assignments were made the matter rests there.

Shrubb is said to be in the best possible condition.

COURT HOUSE IS FIRE TRAP

An investigation of the Suffolk county court house in regard to fire escapes has been made by Chief Mullen of the Boston fire department, District Chief Tom and Captain Riley. The investigation was carried on in secret during the last few days.

There are no fire escapes on the court house, although it is two feet high and contains six stories. The officials, it is said, find that the building is a fire trap, especially the upper stories.

What interested Chief Mullen most was one of the rooms on the top floor of the building, where twenty-five girl copyists are employed by the register of deeds. The only means of egress from this room is a narrow stairway.

The fire department officials went over the roof of the court house and came to the conclusion that there should be ladders from one level to the other. There are three levels to the roof of the court house. One of the levels is twenty-five feet below another. It would be impossible for the girls to pass this distance in case they were forced to the roof in case of fire, without serious injury.

It is understood that the fire department officials will make a report on the present condition of the building which will result in immediate action.

The highest ladder used by the Boston Fire Department is only eighty-five feet long, so that in case the girls imprisoned in the copying room of the Registry of Deeds were trapped there it would be impossible to reach them by that means.

$1,500 BLAZE IN THE NORTH END

Captain Riley of Engine 4, Bulfinch street, was overcome and the other members of the same company suffered severely from smoke while fighting a fire in the basement of the four-story store building at Nos. 126 and 128 Hanover street early to-day. The blaze caused a damage of $1,500. The first floor and basement of the building were occupied by the Richmond Syndicate and the three upper floors by the Riker-Jaynes laboratories.

On the way to the fire the rear wheels of the hose wagon of Engine 4 skidding on the slippery asphalt in Salem street and the heavy truck was thrown against a pole. The firemen were badly shaken up, but escaped being thrown to the street by clinging to the guard rails on the wagon.

FAIR CROCKER TRIAL ASSURED

If the theory of this defendant in regard to criticism is true.

"George U. Crocker's name was given to the Mayor, and he was appointed by him. I am glad to say, as a citizen, that his statement that he is a much hated man is not true. When he said that he was a much hated man, because of false charges made about him because of religion, he is making a serious statement. When he says 68 per cent of the population of this county are Roman Catholic that means the men, women and children of all nationalities in this county. Why, the population of the entire State is 55 per cent. Roman Catholic, according to statistics, and President Eliot recently said that the population was 52 per cent. Roman Catholic.

"If he is trying to run away from the 68 per cent Roman Catholic in this county to the 55 per cent or the 52 per cent in other parts of the State he is in a most unfortunate predicament.

Catholics on Jury.

"Does the court think that the people of Roman Catholic faith who come into this court would be prejudiced and violate their oaths? Mr. Crocker places the citizens of this county in a grave predicament.

"The jury that broke the will for George U. Crocker was made up mostly of Catholics. Were they prejudiced? If the number were sufficient if Catholic jurymen, serving on this case, were not prejudiced, is it to be presumed that George U. Crocker, who broke the will of a Host?

"I do not know but the Catholic people of the world owe George U. Crocker a debt of gratitude for breaking the will of a man so narrow that he puts a clause in his will that no money should be given to Catholic charities. Catholic hospitals.

"The affidavit of Michael J. Sughrue was read yesterday morning in the Crocker case. Mr. Sughrue presented to the Suffolk bar a petition signed by 12 leading couples of the bar, in which Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sughrue were included.

"He gives up a retainer of $5,000, which goes with the office of District Attorney, to get out and make money from these people in this county, whom he says, cannot get a fair trial. Speaking for myself, I would have no difficulty in going out and getting any number of affidavits of men whose presumed yesterday, stating that I fair trial could be given in this county.

Save Name of Boston.

"This is not a small county. There are famous men who can be called for jury duty. Poor old Boston has been the subject of talk for the past seven years. We have had a reign of pessimism. Let us not send out to the world that the Superior Court of the State has ruled that this county cannot give a fair trial to a prominent man in public office of this county."

Mr. Pelletier finished at 10:15. Lawyer Charles F. Choate then began his argument to Judge Stevens.

"This is simply an issue of fact," said Mr. Choate. "Can we get an unprejudiced jury in Boston? Can a jury of the entire 180,000 names nominally, but actually there are only between 50,000 and 60,000.

"You heard the affidavits that were produced and you know that the public of Boston has been filled with talk for years that Crocker jury was bribed. Public sympathy was against Crocker in the circumstances of the case and later it became a prime political issue. It was fed to the extent that from 300,000 to 500,000 a day that this jury was bribed.

"My friend made light of the work of the Finance Committee, but it is well to have made light of in the past. I recall that in one of our affidavits Mr. Reynolds remarked that it caused his defeat two years before.

Featured in Campaign.

"It was a feature of the campaign a year ago—a campaign that has not been equalled in political history for bitterness, savage fighting. Direct, blunt charges were made again and again. No such effort to stem Broadcloth at high tide was ever made in this Commonwealth. Those advertising it wished to get the Democratic party out of power. Letters to towns read the Boston papers. It was to the people of Boston those attacks were addressed, and it is from these people that a jury is to be drawn.

"Does not Your Honor suppose that those against whom these attacks were made felt them? True or false, they hurt."

U. S. READY TO INVADE MEXICO

WASHINGTON, April 15.—By direction of President Taft, Attorney-General Carter, commanding the United States army along the Mexican boundary, to-day received orders to be ready to invade Mexico at an hour's notice.

A prompt denial from the British authority of the story that a detachment of British marines had been landed at San Quentin, Lower California, to protect the town against an attack by the insurrectos, calmed the fears that the United States would have to protect against such a violation of the Monroe doctrine by great Britain.

Americans in Peril.

Further fighting between Mexican forces so near the international line as to imperil American lives or interests, as in the Agua Prieta engagement, will be the signal for the American army to swing across into the latter republic. Coincident with these commands President Taft, through the State Department, has served further warning on the Mexican government that further border fighting will result in immediate invasion of Mexico by the United States. The Madero revolutionists, through the Department of Justice and Dr. Gomez, their chief representative at Washington, have likewise received similar warning.

Both War and State Departments to-day anxiously awaited developments in Mexico, expecting reports from Douglas, Ariz., and El Paso. General Wood, chief of staff of the army, wired the commander of the Department of Texas, with headquarters at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., for detailed report on the conditions at Agua Prieta and Douglas. A report also was asked from Major General Arthur at San Antonio.

Taft Justifies Order.

President Taft feels now that his order sending the troops to Texas has been entirely justified by the development of the last few days. Reports from Douglas, Ariz., over that conditions in the Southern republic are, to say the least, alarming. It is hoping for the best that there will be no need for any further movement to the South, but if there should be he knows that 20,000 troops are near the Rio Grande and that one third of the entire Regular border itself is already a force that is highly intelligent.

Dispatches from Douglas, Ariz., say the citizens are living in mortal fear of an other battle across the line at Agua Prieta, Mex., which may result more disastrously to American non-combatants than the one of Thursday. Six hundred rebels under "Red" Lopez are in full possession of Agua Prieta and the post is closed. The Mexican federal troops are believed to be approaching Agua Prieta from the vicinity of Cumaneo, and on the road from Nacozari bringing with them machine guns for an assault upon the city.

INSURRECTOS DEFY U. S. ORDERS NOT TO FIGHT NEAR BORDER

EL PASO, Tex., April 15.—In defiance of the United States government's ultimatum the insurrectos to-day are preparing to attack Ciudad Juarez, directly opposite El Paso, from here at the Mexican end of the international bridge. The war plans of the insurrecto leaders were laid in the open at conference pending the proposed negotiations of Francisco I. Madero, Sr., with his son, General Francisco I. Madero, the insurrecto commander-in-chief, relatives to peace. Now that the senior Madero has turned back from Mexico, declaring he will make no further efforts to end the revolution, the rebel leaders in northern Chihuahua have decided to resume fighting. Pascual Orozco, of Juarez, near the Rio Grande.

It was reported to-day here to-day that 500 rebels have gathered near Borrego, fifty miles south of Juarez, and are moving on the city. The federals in Juarez are preparing ready for a desperate fight. Rebels are stationed at outposts, a mile out from the city limits, and when the attack begins, mines placed and cannon mounted on the roofs of the principal buildings to sweep the approaches to the city.

The fighting here will probably be determined by the action of Pascual Orozco, the insurrectos and federals under Colonel Antonio Rojo, with one to every sixty, supported by machine guns, is making forced marches from Chihuahua City.

Marie Corelli is Snubbed by Society.

LONDON—Marie Corelli, one of the leading residents of Stratford-on-Avon, has been snubbed by the Shakespeare hall committee which hopes to raise $150,000 for a Shakespeare memorial theatre in Stratford. Miss Corelli is not only barred from the committee, but of the 1,500 invitations to the ball none was sent to the authoress.

The great ball will be the chief social event of Coronation week. Albert Hall will be thronged by society in costume. Eleven duchesses are on the committee and forty other smart women will hoop Mrs. Cornwallis West, who heads the committee. Mrs. Corelli, in London, to-day said to the AMERICAN representative:

"It is perfectly true I have not been invited as guest or committeewoman. The reason is simple enough. Although I am a resident of Stratford, where I have some standing as a literary producer, I am trying to purchase tickets at market prices, simply because I care to be present."

Miss Corelli's friends accuse the society women of speculating in ball tickets for personal gain.

Camorra Trial Failure.

ROME—The Camorra trial at Viterbo is generally pronounced a failure. The government intended to eradicate the Camorra and cause the people to loathe secret societies. The trial promises to do neither. The Italian method of criminal procedure confines the prisoners to pens as perspired horses and cover the prosecution with ridicule.

Cuban Troops Mobilized.

HAVANA—General Monteagudo, the commander-in-chief of the Cuban army, has ordered a mobilization of 2,500 troops for maneuvres at Pinar del Rio, where Pino Guerra, the former commander-in-chief, is campaigning against the re-election of President Gomez. The maneuvres are considered as a pretext for a political demonstration.

Chinese Loan Signed.

PEKIN—The agreement for the loan of $50,000,000 by a group of American capitalists to the Chinese government was signed to-day. The negotiations have been going on for some time. The money will be used for railroad construction and for currency reform in the empire. J. P. Morgan & Co. heads the combination.

Spain Checks Portuguese Plot.

LISBON—After repeated demands on the part of the Portuguese provisional government the Spanish government has promised to stop the reported plotting of Portuguese monarchists on the frontier, especially at Vigo and Tuy. Portuguese suspected of plotting will be asked to move further into Spanish territory.

By THE CONTEST EDITOR.

"O!"

O, what?

"O" is the first letter. It begins the big word which is to be explained by the Contest Editor in the Sunday AMERICAN to-morrow, April 16. This big word is the keynote of the special announcement which has been promised to the candidates and their friends in the AMERICAN'S $55,000 Prize Contest.

It is a big chance, the biggest kind of a chance. It is tremendously important to all in the contest. Therefore, all candidates and their friends should be sure to get the AMERICAN to-morrow, to find out all about it.

Everybody, too, that the Sunday AMERICAN contains the ten-vote coupon. It takes only 100 of the Sunday AMERICAN coupons to make 1,000 votes.

There are all sorts of candidates in this contest, of course. They are old and young, big and little, short and tall. One of the tallest is Charles P. Anthony of Haverhill. Charles is one of the enterprising young men of Haverhill. As a boy he was always known as "Doc" Anthony, because his father is a physician. Charles was rail from his babyhood days. He is six feet and some inches now. He lives in the Bradford district of Haverhill, the neighborhood of such well-known Haverhillites as Captain "Jack" O'Connor of Dartmouth football renown, and "Border" Dreyer and others who became famous. Charles is a rousing candidate and expects to boom up tall at the finish of the contest, just as he is above the average height of his fellow beings.

OLD HOMESTEAD SONGS AT BIER

PROVIDENCE, April 15.—None of the homely melodies which make Denman Thompson's "Old Homestead" the classic of its kind is longer or more lovingly remembered than the singing of the command quartet. This same, famous "Old Homestead" quartet is to sing the closing actor's requiem.

This was decided upon when the news of his death at his country estate at Westminster, N. H., brought grief and sorrow to the members of "The Old Homestead" company, which is playing at one of the local theatres.

Last evening the performance was given as usual, but again and again, as the old familiar scenes were enacted and the old familiar words again spoken, all sat intimately associated with the memory of the first, and to many the only "Uncle Josh," in wave of emotion held all but disrupting the company.

Every the audience was visibly impressed. The singing of "Rock of Ages," by the farmhands in the first act was received in deep silence, where it is usually followed by applause. The old familiar hymn, which Mr. Thompson during the years he played Uncle Josh" listened to, performance after performance, will be among the last the quartet will sing over his grave at West Swanzey on Sunday.

Of the oldest members of the company, Fred Clare has been in the double quartet for 20 years, and George Fatch has played the fiddler for twenty-one years, and Maggie Mitchell has long been identified with the role of Aunt Matilda. Charles Clarke is one of the two "old boys."

LE BLANC QUESTIONS RULED OUT IN SECOND GLOVER WILL FIGHT

A preliminary contest in the Glover will case appeal took place before Judge Hammond in a special session of the Supreme Court when lawyers for the four brothers who are trying to break the will opposed a petition of Samuel D. Elmore, executor of the will, for the appointment of a commission to go to West Arichat and question Hattie Le Blanc.

Judge Hammond granted the petition. He further ruled that interrogatories from Hattie Le Blanc would not be admitted at the trial. He declared that any evidence from her would have to be in the form of depositions, that both sides would have to go to West Arichat and get this deposition or else have her come here to testify.

At the conclusion of the hearing he announced that the trial would commence in East Cambridge a week from Monday. Next Thursday he will hear arguments on setting aside the issue to be decided by the jury.

The examination is to offset the interrogatories that she will answer for the contestants of the will. There are sixty questions in the interrogatories sent to her last Wednesday. Lawyers for Mrs. Glover want the commission appointed for the purpose of cross-examining Hattie Le Blanc on these questions.

Will Case Up Thursday.

The will case will be heard before a jury in the Supreme Court early Thursday. The will is that of Clarsure F. Glover, the Waltham laundryman who was murdered in his laundry a year ago last November. Hattie LeBlanc is the sixteen-year-old girl who worked in the Glover home. She was charged with Glover's murder, tried, found not guilty and a few days after the trial went to her home in West Arichat.

The interrogatories are sent to her to answer in case she does not want to come into court to testify. The questions are written and her answers made to them will be read in court as testimony from her.

The petition presented before the Supreme Court was offered by Samuel D. Elmore, executor under the will. As he will be one of the witnesses at the will trial, he cannot act as counsel. Fletcher D. Ranney is to act as counsel for the will. Ranney, Elmore and Tupper were in court to-day.

New Counsel for Brothers.

Counsel for the four contesting brothers were Jesse Gove and Edward P. Parry. Lawyer Gove was active in the will trial in the probate court. Lawyer Barry has been called into the case since that time.

Lawyer Ranney argued for the petition. He recited the terms of the will and said: "The will that is to be contested is that of Clarence F. Glover, who was killed in his laundry a year ago last November. It was made the previous April. The bulk of the estate was left to the widow, Mrs. Lillian M. Glover. In fact she received two-thirds of the estate, and the only brother who is now contesting, Seymour Glover, got the remaining third.

"The petition is for the appointment of a commission to be appointed by the court for the purpose of going to West Arichat to get viva voce answers to questions from Hattie Le Blanc.

"Last Wednesday there were filed at East Cambridge by counsel for the contestants, interrogatories embracing sixty questions to be answered by this young woman. Hattie Le Blanc was tried for the murder of Clarence Glover and acquitted.

"The trial of the will case starts next Thursday. Hattie Le Blanc will be a witness. The interrogatories will hardly reach here in time for us, and we would be to our minds unfair for us to meet any answers that might be given to these interrogatories by the filing of cross interrogatories. West Arichat is a day and a half's journey from here.

"The issue is whether the Glover will was brought about by fraud on the part of Lillian M. Glover, the widow. Hattie Le Blanc is a girl without education and speaks only French. These interrogatories propounded by counsel for the Glover brothers are vague and unsatisfactory. It would be impossible for her properly to answer them, and combat any evidence that they might contain, unless we had a talk with Hattie LeBlanc. The Court has the right to appoint a commissioner, so that Hattie LeBlanc's statement might be secured, and we ask Your Honor to provide for such an appointment.

"As showing how vague these questions are put to Hattie Le Blanc, I quote a few. One of them, No. 8, is: 'Did Mrs. Glover say anything to you about her husband? If so, state what she said and when and where she said it.'

"Another one: 'Did Mr. Glover ever say anything to you about his wife? If so, state what he said and when and where he said it.'

What They Said of Each Other.

"And still another question: 'Did you ever hear Mr. Glover say anything about his wife to a third person? If so, where was it, when was it, and what did he say?'

"And yet another: 'Did you ever hear Mrs. Glover say anything about a third person in reference to her husband? If so, when was, where was it, and what did she say?'

"These questions should appeal to Your Honor at once as vague. It would be absolutely impossible to get separate answers to these questions, unless we should be given the right to have Hattie LeBlanc questioned orally by a commission of the court's selection.

"We cannot go to trial properly with the simple filing of cross-interrogatories. We want Hattie Le Blanc's story. We want it from herself and justice requires if anything at all comes from her that it come through a commission appointed by the court to question her and to submit her statements to the court in the trial of the will case."

HETTY GREEN TO OPEN BANK HERE

Mrs. Hetty Green is to establish a chain of private banks from Boston to San Francisco, to handle her vast fortune of $100,000,000 or more, it was learned to-day.

Mrs. Green, who will have the management of her son, Col. E. H. R. Green in the enterprise, has interests in real estate worth of property in Boston, New York and Philadelphia. She will not have private banks will be in the nature of branches of the Green family banking system will be that money made in these investments will be kept in the family and invested in that same city. The Green profits, for instance will be invested in Boston and not sent to New York or abroad, like so much of the capital that comes to Boston.

This investment of Boston wealth in developing the West was made public in Boston according to thoughtful students of the affairs.

Despatches from New York to-day quote Colonel Green in describing the plans of his mother for establishing the chain of private banks. Colonel Green was at his business office in Wall street, New York.

After consulting the best legal talent in New York, we have decided that the only plan of forming a trust company for the handling of the estate would not do. We found that a trust company in this State in which we should hold title to the real estate in Illinois, and we found other difficulties. Our plan now is to establish the private banking house of E. H. R. Green & Co. in New York. Then we will establish branches in Boston, Chicago, Boston and San Francisco.

"In each city we will have our local representative in the firm. We believe that we will thereby be able to keep the Green estate with the best results. Besides the branches mentioned above Hetty Green has interests in Baltimore, Chicago and so on.

Mother and I have saved her money almost if she could get 3000 per cent on it. Among the speculations William Waldorf Astor and I are with her in that. Although I was born in England, I became a naturalized citizen when I was twenty years old.

Mrs. Green may with her son at the Waldorf in New York to-day helping him with a big deal in real estate. Stenographers and secretaries were kept at it despite the fact that the eve of Easter is a holiday in the financial section. Colonel Green was staunch in his defense of his mother's business methods. He said that her intended to follow them despite the criticism that has established and fashioned down town. He said that his mother was not a hard woman in a business transaction, and that she had never charged more than 6 per cent on a loan.

PROROGUE N. H. LEGISLATURE

CONCORD, N. H., April 15.—The New Hampshire Legislature for 1911 ended its work today when Governor Bass prorogued both branches and praised the Home more than the Senate in his remarks. Just before he addressed the Senate the House refused to pass over his veto four appropriation bills aggregating $134,500. One appropriated $44,500 for a new building for the State Normal School at Keene, another $50,000 for a new engineering building at the New Hampshire State College at Durham, the third $10,000 for State House improvements and the fourth $30,000 for a military armory at Portsmouth.

When he prorogued the Senate Governor Bass said: "I want to congratulate you on the laws which you have passed, especially those which are in fulfillment of the promises made by both parties to the people of this State. These measures represent the will of the people, and it is essential to the success of our government and institutions that this will find voice in the constructive work of those chosen to represent the people.

"You have passed laws which extend the functions of government to meet the new conditions of our economic growth. These laws are broad in scope and eminently safe to all. Such laws as the employers' liability, the tax commission, the public service commission and corrupt practices act are of national significance. They are part of a national movement. They tend to place the utility of the institutions, for they spring directly from the principles which produces our nation.

Governor Bass went immediately before the House where his speech embodied all the essentials of his remarks to the Senate and where he also said:

"The legislation which you have originated and passed represents a broad field of progress in the development of the State. You have accomplished a laborious work for large order and regardless of party you are fulfilled the pledges you have made to the people of New Hampshire."

BAXTER SENT TO NAVY YARD HERE

Naval Constructor W. J. Baxter, now at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, comes to Charlestown to succeed George H. Rock, who is transferred to Washington.

Constructor Baxter is well known here, having been here twelve years ago in command. The transfer caused great surprise, because of the important work which Captain Baxter had on hand in the completion of the battleship Florida and the laying down of the keel of the battleship New York. There was resentment in the Brooklyn Navy Yard and it is reported here today that there was some talk among the workers of holding a mass meeting to discuss the change. Captain Baxter has been highly praised for his work in the building of the Connecticut and the Florida, and the people of the yard say they can see no good reason for supplanting him with another man at this time.

Captain Baxter has been rigid in his inspection of armor plate and he rejected all plates found to be in the least defective. Some of his friends declare he is the victim of the resentment of the steel interests.

Constructor Rock goes to Washington to take the place of Constructor Robert Stocker as a member of the Board of Inspection and Survey. Constructor Stocker succeeds Captain Baxter at Brooklyn, where the latter has been seven years.

ADMIRER SENDS $5 TO "BOY FATHER"

BROCKTON, April 15.—Roy Baker, the 16-year-old youth who is custodian of his three young sisters by order of Judge Warren A. Reed, has received $5 from the judge, the money being sent by D. R. Hamlin of Pingel Sound. Flowing read of the struggle of the young man to provide for his sisters while his mother was in Sherborn and of his determined effort to secure a pardon for her. He wrote a letter to Judge Reed, telling him to give the money to the youth for a dinner for himself and sisters.

SEES JOKERS IN SCHOOL BUDGET

A $2,000 automobile for the schoolhouse custodian and a $1,500 trip to Europe for Superintendent Brooks, while a reduction of $20,000 in supplies and $10,000 in teachers' salaries is proposed, has aroused Mrs. Susan Y. Fitzgerald of the School Voters' League to say a few caustic words concerning the school budget for this year.

"I think the wording of the budget is most misleading," she said. "As it stands it is going to be very easy to use the appropriation for other purposes than those which were distinctly in the minds of the public when the matter of the appropriation was under discussion.

"The term 'elementary teachers' can be made to include the masters and submasters, who are practically all of them men on good salaries, and who alone will reap the benefit of the increase in salary unless the wording is changed to 'elementary grade teachers,' which is the proper term for the underpaid women teachers in primary grades. The taxpayers who are in sympathy with the needs of the elementary teachers, I think, should be warned to see that the money is spent for that purpose.

"I find in the budget an estimate of $3,000 for an automobile for the schoolhouse custodian, and I cannot help wondering how many school books that $3,000 would buy. The books in present use are many of them positively unfit to use, so soiled and distreputable have they become from long usage.

"The estimated reduction necessary in teachers' pay, I see by the budget, is $10,000 a year, and that in supplies and incidentals $20,000. What I say is, let part of this $30,000 be the auto and the trips to Europe, not the school books.

FARMERS PLANNING BROOM CORN CORNER

PONTIAC, Ill., April 15.—Farmers of Cumberland and Cole counties have signed an agreement pledging themselves not to raise broom corn for five years unless the dealers will guarantee them a price of at least $120 a ton in advance of planting. For twenty years the two counties have been the broom corn centre of the country.

MYSTIC SHRINE THEATRE PARTY

More than the usual amount of interest is being shown this year in the annual theatre party of the Mystic Shrine, and to meet the demand for seats at "The Matinee Idol" at the Shubert next Tuesday, where the Shriners will gather for their celebration, a special matinee will be given on that day besides the regular evening performance. At the rate the seats have been selling for these performances, DeWolf Hopper, himself a loyal Shriner, will face two full houses of red and white fezzes. If the plans for the theatre party meet expectations there will be spirited times at the Shubert next Tuesday.

The Majestic Theatre will reopen this evening after a week of darkness, and Henry W. Savage's "The Prince of Pilsen," will be the attraction. It was originally planned to have the first performance of this Lederer and Pixley comic opera on Monday, but the lively demand for seats during the week inspired the management of the theatre to start things this evening. The continued success of "The Prince of Pilsen," after its long and useful career, gives it peculiar distinction among American musical plays. One of the earliest of Mr. Savage's musical offerings, it has remained a profitable investment for him through many seasons that have followed. It has a record that equals any of the standard operas of the last ten years.

Lucille La Verne, who is well known in Boston through her remarkable performance of Clancey with William Gillette in "Clarice," as well as her long service with the Boston Theatre stock company a few years ago, will return to Boston on May 1 as the featured member of a company which is to present her own dramatization of Will S. Harlow's "Ann Boyd." The play will be seen at the Shubert Theatre and Miss La Verne will appear in the name part.

MAINE'S FIRST CUNARDER.

PORTLAND, Me., April 15.—The Portland, the first Cunard liner to come to this city, arrived here from London with 640 immigrants, mostly from Southern Europe.

HOLY SATURDAY FILLS CHURCHES

The solemn exercises of the blessing of the tripod, candle, the new fire, the incense, the paschal candle and other necessories of worship, took place at 7:30 at the Cathedral, and during the day other services set for Holy Saturday were performed.

The special services of Good Friday drew thousands to the various churches of the city. At the Cathedral the first feature of the services, which began at 8 o'clock, was the replacing on the altar table of a strip of white linen, significant of the preparation for the reception of the sacrament on Holy Saturday.

Thousands went forward to the altar rail to take part in the veneration of the cross, after which was celebrated the mass of the presanctified. The Tenebrae was given in the evening.

During the services at the Immaculate Conception Church there was not a vacant seat. In the morning the blessed sacrament was brought from the repository in St. Valentine's chapel by a procession of priests, scholastics and novices to the altar in the main church, where the mass of the presanctified was celebrated.

The most dramatic feature of the exercises of the day was what is known as "The Three Hours' Agony," which is celebrated from noon to 3 o'clock, the hours during which Christ was suspended on the cross.

A musical program without organ was rendered by the united quartet. The Rev. Robert F. X. Reynolds, S. J., of Jersey City preached the sermon.

At the evening services the Rev. William P. Brett, S. J., delivered a sermon based on the passion of Christ, to a crowded congregation.

N. Y. FUGITIVE IS CAUGHT IN CHELSEA

Paul L. J. Montrala, who says he is a descendant of Gen. Montrala, was arrested in Chelsea on an indictment by the Kings county, N. Y., grand jury charging him with the larceny of goods valued at $60 from a department store. He was arraigned before Commissioner Hayes and held in $1,000 bail for the grand jury. Montrala is said to have been employed by Mrs. Eugenia A. Gaylord, a rich widow of No. 141 Fort Greene place, Brooklyn, N. Y., who says he obtained the goods on her account and disposed of them. When before the grand jury as a witness she accused Montrala of departing with railroad bonds to the value of $1,500 owned by her, and refused to prosecute him. A Brooklyn detective, armed with extradition papers, is on the way here to take Montrala to New York.

BARGE CAPTAIN SAVED ADRIFT

PROVIDENCE, April 15.—The crew of the Point Judith life-saving station to-day took from a drifting dory Captain John Keefe, whose barge, the Sailor, broke loose from her tow late last night and sank a few minutes later. Captain Keefe and his dog constituted the entire crew. The captain was in a critical condition when rescued. He had been drifting for nearly ten hours.

The tug Salvation and four barges, among which were the Sailor and the Alma, passed Watch Hill going east yesterday afternoon. They were next sighted off Quonocontaug and later at Point Judith. In no instance did they signal these points, as is customary when all is well.

Shortly after 7 o'clock Point Judith saw two of the barges break loose. They were the Alma and the Sailor. The Alma anchored after a time, but the Sailor, after floundering for a while, sank. Captain Keefe was drawn under when she sank. He fought his way to the surface, and managed to climb into his dory. His feet were crushed and he was unable to make any headway. A dense fog shut in a few minutes later and he was obscured from shore. Early to-day Surfman Carpenter heard his cries for help. The surf boat was put off and Keefe was rescued a short time afterward. He lives in Perth Amboy.

BOY BADLY HURT IN RUNAWAY DASH

Raymond Whitcomb, aged thirteen, was seriously injured in a runaway accident on Pine street, Stoneham, when a high-spirited horse owned and driven by Edward O'Donnell, with whom young Whitcomb and two school friends were riding, became frightened and ran half a mile to the corner of Franklin street, where the wagon struck a telegraph pole. All four were thrown into the street, Whitcomb striking heavily on his back.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Secretary of the Navy Meyer has decided to raise the floating crane which is at the bottom of the slip at the Charlestown Navy Yard. It has been estimated by the navy engineers this work will cost the Government about $35,000.

An Easter Blessing

FAIR EASTER, SAYS PROPHET

"A nice, fair day" for Easter, says Weather Forecaster Smith. It will be slightly cooler than to-day, when at 8 the mercury stood at 50. At that hour to-morrow Mr. Smith expects to pay a temperature of 40 or so, but as the sun ascends the air will grow warmer.

It is cloudy in the greater part of the East and South to-day. But there is no rain in New England. The winds along the coast are light, ranging from six miles in Boston to eight at Hatteras, and are westerly. It will clear in the east to-night.

The forecast for Boston is: Fair to-night; cooler; Sunday fair; moderate westerly winds.

DRAW PLANS FOR NEW HARVARD LABORATORY

Harvard is assured of a new laboratory to be devoted entirely to original research in physical and inorganic chemistry. The fund of $100,000 for its construction was subscribed more than a year ago by Dr. Morris Loeb '83, James Loeb '88 and other graduates, the two mentioned contributing half the sum. Announcement has been made by the college office that the total amount is in the hands of the treasurer. The building will be on Divinity avenue, south of the Peabody museum. Plans are being made by A. Wadsworth Longfellow '77. It is expected ground will be broken about July 1.

FELKER'S BONDSMEN MAY HAVE TO PAY

Sureties on the bonds of the defaulting city treasurer of Newburyport, James V. Felker, may have to pay their liability, aggregating $80,000, according to a decision of Judge Loring of the Supreme Court. The defalcation was about $85,000. The judge dismissed a writ of mandamus brought by William F. Houston and William H. Noyes, two of the sureties on the bond of the ex-treasurer, against Mayor Burke, City Solicitor Withington and Treasurer Wilson of Newburyport, seeking to compel them to accept a tender of $2,000 each in full settlement of the claim of the city against them.

EX-GOVERNOR'S BODY SENT HOME FOR BURIAL

MILFORD, N. H., April 15.—The body of Ex-Governor John McLane is expected to arrive here to-morrow afternoon on the late express from Southern Pines, N. C. The date of the funeral will not be fully decided until that time. It is probable it will be a public service and may be held in the First Congregational Church, where he was an attendant. The official decision as to the cause of his death is given as acute Bright's disease, and not cirrhosis of the liver, as reported.

GATES FIGHTS EXTRADITION

CALGARY, April 15.—Louis F. Gates of Canton, Mass., is held for forgery and theft amounting to $7,761.20, which charges he is alleged to have obtained from Clare B. Woolls of Boston. Gates is fighting extradition. At the time of his arrest he was a traveling salesman.

SAIL THROUGH CAPE COD CANAL

A dream of two centuries ago came true to-day when the first vessel sailed through the nearly completed waterway between Barnstable and Buzzards Bay. The trip was made by the steamer King Philip, carrying a party of Tech students and civil engineers who inspected the engineering features of the canal.

Although open to the passage of vessels it may be months before the canal is ready for coastwise shipping between ports to the north and south of the canal. When opened to traffic the canal will provide a short waterway between New England ports and New York. It is expected of this account to increase the advantages of the port of Boston. Transportation authorities of New England look upon the completion of the canal of supreme importance to New England.

Canal Is Eight Miles Long.

No ceremony attended the trip of the King Philip. The vessel left Commercial wharf early to-day and if weather permits will return at 10 o'clock to-night.

Entering the canal from the Sagamore end, the King Philip hands its passengers long enough to inspect the breakwater and other engineering works.

Inspection of the plant and field offices come first, and after this the party will walk along the shore to where the anchor dredge, the General MacKenzie is at work.

It is expected most of the party will make the trip through the canal to Buzzards Bay, aboard the steamer. Those who desire to, will be given the privilege of stopping off and inspecting the Keith Car Works at Sagamore, one of the largest manufacturing plants in the world.

The canal is about eight miles long flowing almost in a straight line, between riprapped shores of sand, from Buzzards Bay to Sandwich. It passes through the villages of Sagamore, Sandwich, Plymouth, Bournedale and Buzzards Bay.

A 1t will be wide enough to accommodate the ships of the future; the biggest battleship in the United States Navy could pass through it with ease. The "old timers" in the villages through which it passes, view it with complacency, looking forward to an era of greater prosperity than they have yet known.

Idea Two Centuries Old.

The idea of a canal was first conceived in 1696, and brought to the attention of the Council of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. A committee was appointed to investigate and report. It never did report.

Eleven years ago DeWitt Clinton Flanagan of New York trudged across the cape from bay to bay. He saw at a glance the possibilities. He saw as a vision the passage to and fro of cargo freighted vessels that would save the myriad craft now diverted in the transportation of freight and passengers between New York and Boston.

Engineers were employed and when their investigations proved a canal was possible, the securing of capital was begun. It remained for August Belmont, whose ancestral home on the Perry side is still standing at Bournedale, to shoulder the greater part of the financial backing.

TEAMSTER IS BADLY HURT IN RUNAWAY

Patrick Burke of No. 979 Columbus avenue, employed by the city as a driver of one of the sanitary wagons, is dying at the City Hospital as a result of a runaway accident. While driving along Lorenz street, Jamaica Plain, his horse took fright. He was thrown from the wagon and the wheels passed over his body. He is fatally and married. He has a fractured skull and internal injuries.

MURRAY DEBATE JUDGE.

Representative Murray of Boston has accepted an invitation from Father Cosgrove of Georgetown University, who was his classmate at the Boston Latin School, to be judge of a debate April 23 between Georgetown and Boston College students. The subject will be the income tax.

RUSTLERS OPEN SERIES WITH THE PHILLIES

RUSTLERS TAKE ON THE PHILLIES TO-DAY

President Horace Foget led the Quakers factory, for the Doolin crowd went to bed late town early this morning. The night on the sleeper evidently had not been satisfactory, for the Doolin crowd went to bed at the Copley Square Hotel right after breakfast. There were twenty-one players in the squad brought here. The entire will consist of five games, winding up with the Patriots' Day double-header.

The Phillies are undoubtedly one of the National League clubs in which the fans are most interested. They are curious to see for themselves whether Doolin got the better of the trade which sent Cozy McQuillen, Moyen and Bates to Cincinnati in exchange for Rowan, Beebe, Paskert and Lobert.

It is just possible that the trade benefitted both clubs. On the showing the Phillies made over in New York it certainly doesn't look as if Doolin's team lost anything by the shakeup. The boys of Sleeptown not only captured two straight from the admittedly formidable New York Giants, but they also showed small respect for the great Christy Mathewson and made that gentleman quit. Jack Coombs won the game against Matty and held the Giants to two hits. He had every appearance able to beat Christy when he was a Cincinnati Red.

Phillies Mean Business.

At this distance it looks as if the Phillies would do some upsetting in the National League race. There is no doubt pennant winner in either league than this same Charley Doolin. He looks like a rubber, and is one. Last season he had some men on his team who thought more of pay day than anything else. Every player he has had players who are trying all the time and who follow his scrappy leadership in a way that makes them hard to down.

But the Philadelphians don't depend on spirit alone. They have an abundance of class, every bit as much as they had in 1910, when they gave some of the leaders hard tussles. The manager himself does most of the catching and has a worthy substitute in Pat Moran.

The pitching staff is exceptionally strong, with Earl Moore, Rowan, Beebe, Stack and Brennan, capable of trimming any sort of an opponent. Fred Luderus, the young Milwaukee guy who was tried out by the Chicago Cubs last Spring, appears to have won the first base job from the veteran Bransfield. Otto Knabe is still at second, with Mike Doolan in his old position at short. Third base is being cared for by Hans Lobert, one of the best all-around ball players in the game.

The outfield is the same as last year except that Dode Paskert has Johnny Bates' old berth in center field. Titus is right and topping the batting list, and the Natural Leaguers' slugging is completed by Sherwood Magee, occupies the remaining pasture.

Full of Speed.

Nor must it be forgotten that the Phillies have speed. Not a single man in the daily lineup bears any resemblance to a truck horse, and Paskert, Lobert and Magee are as fleet a combination as can be found on any man's ball club.

Manager Doolin was out the happiest manager in the world last season, simply because there were three people on the Baker who refused him the proper respect. These three are gone and in their places are men who like the red-haired boss and who will do their best to help him everyday.

This is another one of those numerous National League teams that is filled up with right-handed hitters and against which pitchers are not likely to be particularly effective. Luderus and Titus are the only two in the regular outfit who don't from the off side of the plate.

That these Doolin Dodgers are built on left-handed pitching was demonstrated again yesterday. Manager Jennings had sent George Tyler to see as out to disappoint the visitors from the youth's home, Jerry J. Howard. George was there to the end of the third to prevent murder. The Brooklynites then had their revenge just as many hits, including a long lift over the left field wall by the persistent John Hummel.

MAY PASS UP POLO GROUNDS

NEW YORK, April 15.—The New York National League Club may never play baseball again at the Polo Grounds. City authorities will insist on strictly fireproof structures to replace the grandstand and part of the bleachers destroyed by fire. This raises a serious doubt as to whether the promoters care to invest thousands of dollars in steel and concrete on a leased site.

One thing is definite, however. Until further notice the New Yorks will use the American League park on Washington Heights, beginning a series with Brooklyn there to-day. President Ebbetts of the Brooklyn Club offered his grounds, but as playing dates would interfere acceptance was out of the question.

President Brush is too ill to take any active part in the settlement of the temporary troubles of the New Yorks. He has been in favor of building a concrete and steel stadium, but has hesitated because of uncertainty of the future of the Polo Grounds as the baseball park.

Many times the question of cutting streets through the grounds has been raised, and all efforts to beat the property outright have failed.

The lease has ten years yet to run, but the fire has brought matters to a crisis, and the belief among followers of the game here is that a new site will be selected in the end, although the Polo Grounds may be used temporarily when repairs are made.

MADDEN IS IN MARATHON RACE

The entry of F. J. Madden of the South Boston A. C., winner of the Cathedral A. C. A. A. A. under handicap run last week, has been received by Manager George V. Brown of the American Marathon. The others, which swelled the list to 125, are Roy K. Wentworth of the Prospect Club of Lynn, who has participated in several similar races; Clifton J. Sebastian, Windsor A. A.; F. H. Jones of the Clam Memorial Association of North Weymouth; Bertram G. Rice of the Wellington A. A. of Roxbury, F. J. Hereter of Pawtucket, and H. C. Gay, jr., of Hartford. Arthur and James Bourgeois, Boston Y. M. C. A.

Justin F. Marshall, one of the runners who will represent the Brooklyn Gym Athletic Association, has gone to Marlboro, where, he will complete his training for the race. Moore was accompanied to Marlboro by Joseph Gorman, another Brooklyn runner, who will remain with Marshall until after the race, acting as his trainer in the contest. Marshall professes to be in beautiful shape, and says he is in better condition than four years ago when he finished within the first ten. Several of the athletes have already located near the starting point, among them being Herms of Fall River, who showed up strongly for two-thirds of the distance in the Brockton Fair Marathon run last October, and is looked upon with favor by Mill City friends for the 24-mile race.

Clyde Gilbert, who will care for the runners during the race may secure their numbers and instructions by applying to the office of Secretary Brown or B. Dathuee at the Boston Athletic Association.

BETWEEN THE INNINGS

The Dodgers have more luck about double plays than any team in the country. Four of them helped Schardt out of deep waters yesterday.

The Brooklyn team left last night for New York, but the players didn't know whether there would be a game with the Giants to-day or not. The clubs will play if a park can be found.

Jack Sprat was called to again as pinch hitter yesterday and made good with a clean single to left. He is the veteran of the midst of a rally that was stopped by one of the numerous double plays.

John Hummel is certainly leading the league so far in total bases. He got seven the opening battle and eight yesterday. His homer cleared the left field screen by several feet and carried almost across the railroad tracks. There was no question about its fairness.

Billie Burke got official notice of his release to Montreal as part of the deal which brought Catcher Bridges here. Billie goes to the Eastern Leaguers under an optional agreement and he has enough confidence in himself to believe he will be in the big show next season to stay.

Brooklyn's infield looked very slity in the series here. Jake Daubert is one swell first baseman and it must be a pleasure for the other three to peg at him when they are so sure he will get about everything they throw.

And Tenney's bunch "blew up" yesterday, too. It was a regular massacre out on the baseball ground. But you'll have to give em all a chance before setting after them. April hasn't been a fair one on any of the big leaguers before May.

Thomas Wetmore, who seems to be a very enthusiastic fan, after seeing the Red Sox trimmed in two straight sessions at Washington, wired the following to the editor:

"The American not braves every date on the map. This is the supreme moment. There is no free speech on Red Sox baseball in Boston grounds. We did fairly good by Pat Dougherty go to Chicago! In a pennant necessitous under present conditions.

Sad to relate, "yes" seems to be the only thing just now to that last query. But you never can tell. The same fan who wants to murder the owner, manager, player and umpire when they lose, usually says they're wonders when they win. Here's hoping they "come back."

There was a strange mix-up over a Rustler double play that was said wasn't a double play. It gave the Dodgers their last three runs, but the worst of it was that it delayed the long drawn out game several minutes. With Coulson on first in the ninth inning, Zimmerman raised a fly to Sweeney. It was an easy one but Bill dropped it. When he picked up the ball, both Coulson and Zimmerman were on first base, so he threw to Herzog and thus forced out Coulson. Zimmerman was the all right, but he, instead of Coulson, walked off the bag and toward the bench. Parsons got the ball and ran up and tagged him as he strolled down the line, but Umpire Doyle refused to call him out, holding himself responsible for the two Dodgers' misunderstanding. Manager Tenney offered a protest, but Doyle wouldn't alter his stand. Finally Coulson was called out on Zimmerman pursuaded to return to first base. After which Bergen, Davidson and Cooley proceeded to fatten up their averages at Parson's expense.

HYDE PARK IN LINE WITH A STRONG NINE

Hyde Park will be represented on the diamond this year with one of the strongest semi-professional teams in the State under the management of Thomas F. Devine, who managed the nine so well last year that they won twenty games out of twenty-three played.

Manager Devine has had the boys practicing for the past four weeks, and judging from the work and spirit they have shown, this year's team will be a hummer. There is very little change in the lineup of this year's team.

Games have been arranged with Fitchburg, Hamiltons of Lynn, Lowell, Norwood and other strong teams. Opponents can be made with Thomas F. Devine, No. 472 West River street, Hyde Park.

JAPS INVADE COAST FOR BASEBALL GAMES

SAN FAANCISCO, April 15.—Full of confidence and curiosity the Japanese baseball team of the Waseda University is here to-day ready to open its series of games against a dozen college teams in the middle West and on the coast. The Japanese arrived upon the Nippon Maru.

Y., and in the New England States. The University of Chicago will manage the Waseda team during its stay in this country.

ENGLISH POLOISTS REACH NEW YORK

NEW YORK, April 15.—Captain J. Hardress Lloyd, one of the All-England polo team which is to play the American team for the international cup next month, arrived from England, accompanied by Herbert Wilson, one of his players.

Captain Lloyd said he was in favor of the admission of the offside play, and that he believed the Englishmen would favor the new American rules under which they will play.

YALE CREW IN SIX MILES ROW

SPRINGFIELD, April 15.—The Yale varsity eight-oared crew went out on the Connecticut River in heavy water and rowed six miles, part of the time in a rain shower. The pratice work-outs which will be concluded to-day, are in preparation for the Blue's match race with Pennsylvania May 18.

The work was not aimed to develop pace time. The three-mile up river, like the return, was covered in racing starts and easy stretches, in which the crew showed good form, in the eyes of local experts. It had been planned to have a short match with the local High School crew to-day, but the eights did not meet.

REVERE HIGH WILL LIKELY MAKE GOOD

The Revere High School baseball team promises to be one of the most promising teams in Interscholastic circles. It will have many veterans on the diamond and that star battery, Captain Arlen and Dick Foss, will lead the bulk of the work this coming season. It will be remembered that Captain Allen, who did such great work last year, has received an offer to play with the Lawrence team of the New England League, and ex-Captain Haines an offer from the Lowell club of the same league. In both cases the parents of the boys intervened because they preferred that their sons should take up a business career.

COACH NORTON OF BOWDOIN IS SICK

Walter H. Norton, coach of the Bowdoin College baseball team, is ill with measles at his home in Winthrop.

Arrangements have been made for "Kline" Brady, who played first base on Dartmouth last year, to coach the team during Norton's absence.

GIRLS SELL TICKETS AT MINNEAPOLIS

MINNEAPOLIS, April 15.—When Minneapolis baseball fans wedge their way in front of the ticket windows at Nicollet Park on the afternoon of April 26 they will be confronted by smiling feminine faces. The owners of the faces will be expected to make change just as rapidly as the box office men and ask the usual questions about "grandstand or bleacher."

M'VEY BOUT WAS ON THE LEVEL

NEW YORK, April 15.—Al Lippe, who was present at the recent Langford-M'Vey thing in Paris, says that, in his opinion, the thing was on the level and was not crooked as most of those present thought.

Al says that there was much booing and jeering at the finish of the fight, and most of the sports thought it was a frame-up. Langford was not as vicious as he was pictured, and M'Vey smiled too much to make the thing look real.

"Langford did try, and tried hard," writes Al. "He won in almost every round as far as I could see, but they called it a draw. He fought from the tenth round on with a broken hand, and is leaving for home now, as the hand will not stand the strain of training.

"McVey, too, is going back to America. He seems to be through with Paris and wants to buy a farm in the States.

"I don't think that colored men will ever draw again in Paris. They are sick of the colored fighters now.

"Harry Lewis and Leo Houck fight twenty rounds here on April 22. Good the Harry Lewis-Willie Lewis fight is off. One club has Willie and another Harry, and we can't get together.

"It's going to be a long day before Californians see me once I get out of this coop," said Artie Johnson (the other day in the county jail there, where he is serving a thirty-day sentence for speeding.

"I'm going away from here so fast that the limited train couldn't ever get a whiff of the smoke my car will leave. I wasn't treated right here. They just played me for a sucker."

He is colored and a champion pugilist. Here in New York a millionaire, while speeding, hits a buggy, smashing it, killing one of the occupants and leaving the other for life. He goes free, isn't even fined a nickle.

PERCY WATERS HAS FAST WAREHAM TEAM

WAREHAM, April 15.—The local baseball team is shaping up fast and a good team is promised by Manager Percy Waters. The opening game will be played April 19, with the New Bedford Y. M. C. A. on the local grounds. The infield of the local team will be made up of Dolphin, the fast Marion catcher, behind the bat, "Pete" Dexter in the box, Kelman short stop, Byers first base, Nelson 2nd, Henshaw, Huxtable, Besse to fill the outfield positions. The other places will be filled this week. Ellis, who did very effective work pitching last year, will be the extra pitcher.

LANGFORD HOME FROM ABROAD

Sam Langford, accompanied by his trainer, John Davis and George Byers, quietly slipped into Boston from New York, where they had just landed from England. Langford immediately went to his home in Cambridge, where he denied himself to all callers.

Byers was found at his old haunts on Cambridge street, last night. "The West End man was rather reticent, and said the party had a very pleasant trip. Byers, in referring to the late Langford-McVey contest, told a close friend that Sam had all the best of the contest. Byers also said that he did not think Langford was a party to any frame-up.

He did say that Langford knew that he was not to knock out McVey, but was to go in and get the decision. The result of the match was a great surprise to Langford, immediately after the fight Langford left for England, while Woodman and a few others of the party remained in Paris.

The manner in which Byers talked makes it appear that there are strained relations between manager and fighter. Byers says while there might have been some trouble between Langford and Woodman after the match, everything has been patched up.

Woodman, Flynn and Bob Armstrong are still in England, but informed Byers, so he says, that they would sail for home immediately after the Flynn fight with Gunner Hewitt.

To-day Langford will go to Weymouth to visit his father, who is dangerously ill.

BASEBALL FANS MOURN FOR JOSS

TOLEDO, O., April 15.—With the passing of Addie Joss, the Cleveland's star pitcher, Toledo has lost one of its best and most prominent citizens, while the baseball public has lost one of the best and most famous players the game has ever known.

It is some time since so much genuine sorrow has been felt as the announcement of Addie's death, for the Cleveland twirler had as many friends as any man in Toledo.

Another feature of this sad announcement was the total unpreparedness of the public for the news.

Few people even knew he was seriously sick, the attending physician refusing to give out his ailment other than that he was a sick man. Joss, on Wednesday a week ago, was up and around as well as ever. On Thursday morning, however, he was confined to his bed and was pronounced suffering with pleurisy. The pleurisy was relieved, but something more serious, tubercular meningitis, attacked him.

Funeral on Monday.

The great twirler's strength already had been sapped and he succumbed quickly. He had used himself up in efforts to serve the club, and his final struggle was a hopelessly one-sided.

The funeral services will take place on Monday at 2 p. m., at the Masonic temple, Michigan and Adams streets. They will be conducted by the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons and Toledo commandery, Knight Templars. The body will lie in state at the temple from noon until 2 p. m. Burial will be at Woodlawn.

Mrs. Theresa Joss, Addie's mother was totally unaware of her boy's death. She fainted upon nothing her wreath on the door. Mrs. Joss, the wife, is bearing up well.

With Addie Joss, baseball was a profession as serious as that of any other, but it was not long before he had brought them out of the factories and the counting rooms into the open air and the sunlight and made them forget the petty annoyances of life. In taking baseball seriously he was in return taken seriously by the people, regarded more as a man of more than usual intelligence and one who would honor and adorn any profession in which he had elected to engage.

Joss Made Game Fight.

Addie Joss was but 31 years of age—just the period of his greatest promise—and his untimely death is especially shocking in that he was the breadwinner for two children, 8 and 4 years old, respectively, a wife and a widowed mother. The death of the great pitcher was caused by tubercular meningitis, a rarely contracted disease, and one for which no cure is known to science.

Joss did not have hope in his battle with death. On the ball field he was never defeated until the last man was out, and in his fight with the grim destroyer he was confident of recovery until almost the last. The combined concourse told a short time before death.

COAKLEY TO PITCH AGAINST CUBANS

"Andy" Coakley, Frank Chance's former Chicago Cub twirler, has been reinstated into the good graces of the major and minor leagues. The collegian is now coaching the Williams College ball team. Henceforth he will stick to the coaching game and playing independent ball. Coakley has signed a contract to pitch against the Cuban Champions when they make their appearance at the Boston American League Grounds April 19. Coakley will twirl for the All Stars.

BOXING NOTES

That bout to at the Armory A. A. on Tuesday night should prove to be a humdinger. Eddie Attell and Al Delmont have been signed over again, and if the bout is a repetition of the mill that they put up last Wednesday all the fans will get what they want. It is not very often that referees up the same men for the main bout a week later.

Packey McFarland has gone to training for his bout with Tommy Murphy, that will take place in New York next Monday. Packey has stated that he does not expect to knock out the Boston boy, for he is too good for that, but he will surely outpoint him.

The Armory matchmaker is after Packey McFarland for a bout with Eddie Murphy of South Boston for April 26. Eddie Murphy is willing to meet the Chicago boy, but it seems as if they're holding out for some little reason.

Sam Langford and his followers, including his trainers, manager, backers and several dinglees, arrived from France yesterday and when they do Jack Johnson was serving a term in the jail all hands had a fine laugh.

The Queen City A. A. of Manchester, N. H., has put on another big card for the fans up in the neck of the woods. Bill McKinnon and Joe Mandell will meet each other next week and Watson and it is predicted that they will put up a breaking bouts.

There is only one live champion and that is Wolgast. Jack Johnson is in jail, the middle and welter weights are a joke while Ad Wolgast is ready to meet any one that has come to come. It is the first time that the champions have been in such a predicament.

They all seem to be flocking Owen Moran. His manager has been trying to arrange bouts with the best lightweights now in the ring, but without doing. Moran boxed several times at the Armory and many of the fans there are wild to see him and would like to see him get on on some of the big guns.

Pa Coulon has drawn the line on these ten-round bouts. Frankie Burns, the "little Demon" of Troy, wants to meet Johnny Coulon for ten rounds, but Pa says that twenty rounds is his length for a bout.

PACKEY DODGES EDDIE MURPHY

By RILEY.

Well, it's all off.

Packey McFarland just won't meet Eddie Murphy, the South Boston lightweight, and the one best bet in this neighborhood as the boy to take the "stockyard champion" off his high horse.

Packey has a holy horror of this Murphy youngster, and while he shows good sense in this respect he is not giving the fight followers a run for their money, neither is he boasting his own game by dodging the issue the way he does.

Here is the story of the near match up to date:

Some few months ago Mr. McFarland came right out in the open, declared himself the only real live middleweight champion, and close on his heels came a challenge from Mr. Tommy Murphy, Murphy's manager.

Packey was willing. Surest thing you know. But someone got the Chicago boy's ear and whispered something about this selfsame Murphy and Packey started to figure up.

Then he went away, but the match was just as good to on as soon as he fixed up his little affair with Ad Wolgast. That fell through, but even then Packey did not send the word along.

McFarland is now in New York, and he was captured on the end of a telephone to-day. These are the terms he laid down to Murphy for a match: You must make 135 pounds and I will come in at catch-weights.

Fine. You're safe, Packey.

MANTELL IS BOOKED FOR THREE MATCHES

Frank Mantell, the Pawtucket middleweight, will meet Bill McKinnon at the Queen City A. C. at Manchester in a fifteen-round bout next Wednesday night. April 26 he will go to Dayton, O., where he will face Jack Dillon, who beat him here, for the second time. About the first week in May Mantell will appear in a main bout at the Rhode Island A. C. at Thornton. His opponent has not been selected, but efforts are being made to land Frank Klaus.

Mantell may soon retire from the ring game, for he is backing and assisting his brothers in erecting a paper mill, which will make glazed paper, at Burlington, just outside Pawtucket, where he lives with his parents.

BILLY CORRIGAN TO FIGHT BROWN

The program for the Armory A. A. show next Tuesday evening was completed today, including a six-round bout between Billy Corrigan, the amateur performer who has defeated some of the best amateurs, and who has decided to try his luck at the professional end of the game, and Jack Brown of San Francisco. Young Jasper of the North End, who injured his ankle previous to his contest with Joe White, has another chance with White. Tom Foley of South Boston and Young McDonough of Manchester, N. H., have agreed to box eight rounds.

Abe Attell is superintending Monte's training for his return match with Dumont.

5 BOXERS FINED AND GO TO JAIL

NEW YORK, April 15.—Samuel Cook, John J. Sellin, James E. Doyle, Frank Neal and Frederick McFaddea, professional boxers, were found guilty in Brooklyn of having participated in boxing bouts at the Brighton Beach Athletic Club in February last, to which admission was charged, contrary to law. They were given the alternative of $25 fine or ten days in jail.

BOUTS PLENTY FOR M'KINNON

Bill McKinnon, the Roxbury middleweight, left the Philadelphia last night to meet Tom McMahon, the Cleveland boxer, and if he wins he will be matched with Jimmy Gardiner of Lowell in a six-round bout.

Gardiner is now in Pittsburg and on his way East will stop at Philadelphia and meet the winner of to-night's bout on Saturday night.

STAR ATHLETES FOR THE B. A. A.

At the meeting of the Board of Governors of the Boston Athletic Association to be held next Tuesday, the applications for associate membership of James E. MacDougall and Harry T. Worthington, the two Exeter track stars, and J. O. Johnstone and Laurence A. Whitney, the clever Worcester Academy athletes, will be acted on.

MacDougall tied with Johnstone in the running high jump at 6ft. 9½in. at the recent B. A. A. schoolboy meet, while Worthington is a strong sprinter, hurdler and broad jumper.

Whitney is an all-around athlete, his best work being in the weight events. He has a record close to 45 feet in the 16 pound shot, and recently came within a few inches of the world's interscholastic record of 50ft. 8 2-5in. held by Ralph Rose, with the 12-pound sphere.

Things About Women Men Can't Understand

By DOROTHY DIX

Her Strange Theory of Economy

"I KNOW what the riddle of the Sphinx is. It's her pocketbook," said the fourth man, "the real thing about woman, that no man ever gets a line on, is the way she spends her money, and her theory of economy.

"A man's idea of thrift is to do without the things he wants and put the money in the bank. A woman's idea of thrift is to do without the things she wants, and spend her money for something she doesn't want, because it happens to be cheap. A woman never feels so much as if she would be backing at the Treasury, if she had her just deserts, as when she buys carrots, which her family won't eat for dinner, instead of potatoes, which they will eat, because carrots are five cents cheaper than potatoes.

"So far as I have been able to comprehend this cryptic matter at all, a woman's theory of economy is based on the law of gain counter. You must always spend your money in something that has been marked down from $1 to 99 cents. If you do that, you are a pattern of thrift, and whether you needed the thing, whether it is suitable, or of good quality, are immaterial matters with which you do not need to concern yourself.

In Awe of Real Money

"Also I have discovered that checks and bills women hold in contempt and dealgardly and frivolously with, but the real mazuma fills them with a sort of unspeakable fear and awe; and they salaam before it, and part with it with reluctance. A woman will spend twice as much if she has things charged, or pays for them with checks, as she will if she has to dig down into her pocketbook, and fish out the good money every time.

"I got wise to this early in my married life through a little incident that was illuminating to me. My wife saw a diamond brooch priced $1,500, that she set her heart upon, and began teasing me to buy. In vain did I try to show her that that was entirely too much money for people in our circumstances to put into a trinket. Nothing would do her but she must have it, and, finally, I consented, and told her I would send the money up from my office and she could go and buy it.

"Well, I sent around to the bank and had a check for $1,500 cashed in large, round silver dollars. It took two boys to carry them up to my house, but they lugged them up, and when I arrived at home at night I said to my wife:

"'Let's see the pin!'

"'Pin,' she exclaimed, horrified. 'Why John Thompson Perkins, did you think I was going to be extravagant enough to spend all of that money for a silly little diamond brooch? Why, it would be sinful, and you ought to thank Heaven that you have a thrifty and economical wife, who wouldn't even think of wasting money that way.'

"But you kept insisting on buying the pin," I said.

Her Idea of a Check

"Oh, she replied, 'I didn't know you were going to give me the money to buy it with. I thought you would just write a check for it. Anyway, I never had any idea that $1,500 was that much money.'

"And now you see that the spending of that much actual cash appalled her; but if she had paid for the pin with a check he would have always had an idea that somehow she got the jewel for a foolish little piece of paper that didn't take me half a minute to write.

"Nevertheless, my wife considers herself a financial genius, and the great mystery she can never solve is, how I kept out of the poorhouse before she took hold of my purse. Privately, she thinks money making must be a very easy game that a fool can play, since I can hold a hand in it, for she is filled with a blighting contempt for my ability to save it after I have made it.

"One of the financial points we have argued a million times is about my shirts. She can't get over my wastefulness in buying the kind I want, made to fit, instead of the odds and ends that she gets on the bargain tables, and every now and then she bobs up with a bunch of these duds.

"'I won't wear 'em,' I say. 'The sleeves are too short, and they are too tight in the neck, and you you could shoot peanuts through the cloth, and the neck is the size of a postage stamp, and they look like a last year's bird's nest, anyway.'

"'Oh, John,' she says, 'what difference does it make whether they fit or not? They were so cheap! I only paid forty nine cents for them, and they were marked down from fifty.'

"'I don't care if they weren't two cents apiece—I won't wear 'em,' I say.

'Extravagance!' She Cries

"Then she gets angry. 'Well, if that isn't like the extravagance of a man!' she cries. 'It's only women who know how to save. Suppose they don't fit? Didn't I wear that pair of sample shoes that I bought for $1.50, although they nearly killed me every time I put them on? They were two sizes too small for me, but they were a bargain, and I bought them and WORE them.'

"Another peculiarity of my wife, and of all other women is that she is penny wise and pound foolish. She will spend a dollar's worth of car fare and three days of hard labor chasing over town comparing prices in order to get a half cent reduction on three yards of lace. Never will I forget one time when she gave herself a violent illness by washing windows that endangered her life and cost me weeks of anxiety, to say nothing of enormous doctors' and trained nurses' bills, the first thing she said when she began to be convalescent was, 'Well, I saved the price of that house-cleaner—and he wanted to charge me $15!'

"But why elaborate incidents of woman's queer economy? Well never understand how feminine economy works until we find out why a woman will calmly pay $250 for an evening dress that she can perhaps wear six times, and then will go hungry, or forage among the food samples in a department store, to save the price of a decent lunch.

"And no man will ever be able to grasp that peculiarity."

Helpful Hints for Women

MOST USEFUL HINTS

Turpentine can be used in all sorts of ways. Here are some: Spirits of turpentine will restore the brilliancy to patent leather. Rags and boots rubbed with a rag moistened with it look almost like new.

A few drops in boxes and cupboards will keep moths away.

If a few drops are added to starch it will prevent the iron from sticking.

A flannel dipped in hot water sprinkled with turpentine and laid on the parts affected will often relieve lumbago and rheumatism.

Turpentine mixed with beeswax makes a good floor polish.

A little added to the steeping water (a tablespoonful to a gallon) makes clothes beautifully white.

FOR CLEANING WINDOWS

The following recipe will be found universally useful: For cleaning windows, mix some common whiting into a paste with paraffin; rub this paste over the window, then polish. Windows cleaned with this will keep clean for weeks, even by the seaside.

USE OF OLD STOCKINGS

Take the legs of the stockings after the feet have been torn off. Hem the raw edge and draw it over the arm. So many people suffer from cold arms, yet do not care to wear an extra bodice. They can be drawn on over the bodice under a coat and removed with the coat if desired.

The End of Lent

By NELL BRINKLEY

My lady—who such a short while ago in sombre clothes and a proper face of solemnity, went in the front door of the church, leaving the gayety of the world behind—now steps through the back door, gorgeously clothed, with a wicked gleam in her eye, to enter again upon the old life of frivolity and pleasure.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

TELL HER THE TRUTH

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man nineteen years of age and in love with a young lady of the same age.

We have kept company for the past seven months and got along very nicely. Now this girl is in a sort of haste to settle down, but I am too young in the first place, and could not support her comfortably with my present salary.

I would like to be engaged to this girl, but will have to wait three years at least before I could marry her to support her comfortably.

We have had some four kind advice as to whether I should tell her of my situation, for I don't think it just to waste her time.

F. R. W.

YOU must tell her just you will not be in a position to marry for the next three years. Even then you will be too young to marry, so, if she loves you, she should be willing to wait.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am twenty, and have been secretly engaged to a man for nearly one year. I have another friend whom I have known quite a while, and whom I consider an "old friend." Recently, at a party, I allowed him to be quite friendly, meaning no harm whatsoever. My fiance objected to it, and does also to my carrying on a simple correspondence with the other man. What is the proper thing to do? Also when I receive invitations to parties or suppers at which my fiance will not be present. Should I accept them or not?

My engagement is not announced. Would it be proper to have another gentleman escort me some?

Please advise me in this thing, properly, and yet do justice to my fiance whom I love very dearly and expect to marry very soon.

X. Y. Z.

I THINK a secret engagement a mistake, but very hard for both the girl and the man, I do not. In the least, wonder that he objected to your old friend's being too friendly; it would be strange if he didn't. If you love your fiance, and mean to marry him, you should give up other men.

Of course, he objects to your going to parties and having other men see you home; would you like the thought of his going about with other girls? If you take my advice, you will announce your engagement and then all these questions will crifts themselves quite naturally.

HAVE DONE ENOUGH

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen years of age, and was quite enamoy with a young man of my acquaintance, but through a disagreement we parted.

This occurred over a year ago. I have recently written him several letters, to all of which he replied. He has not manifested any desire to see me, however, which leads me to believe he is interested in some other girl.

I am very anxious to renew our friendship, so am writing to ask whether I may be so proper, under the circumstances, to invite him to call on me. I would not care to extend the invitation if I thought he was attentive to any other girl.

D. H.

I THINK you have done quite enough. By writing him you have shown that you are anxious to renew the friendship, and anything more on your part would be overdoing. If he wants to see you he will take advantage of the encouragement you have given him.

Married Life the Second Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

In Which Helen's Mother Advises Her to Leave Warren for a Few Weeks' Visit

HELEN folded up her sewing and then took the crochet work from her mother's lap.

"Mother, it is after twelve. You mustn't stay up any longer—you're not used to losing sleep."

"Are you going to walk up until Warren comes?"

"I might as well. I can't sleep if I go to bed."

"Is he often so late?" asked her mother hesitatingly.

Helen nodded. "Sometimes."

Reluctantly her mother went in to bed. Helen settled herself by the light and tried to read. But the magazine soon fell to her lap, and she found herself listening tensely for Warren's step.

She knew the condition he would be in when he came. And that this should happen during her mother's visit! Mrs. Allen had seen enough of their dissensions and quarrels to know that her daughter was not happy. But as yet she did not know that Warren drank. And this, in boast, Helen hoped to keep from her.

Her Mother Shows She Knows

The door opened now, and Mrs. Allen came out in her night gown, a dressing sacque over her shoulders.

"Helen, this thing is a-we—it's almost one. Don't stay up any longer. It won't make him come any sooner.

"Oh, I know, but I couldn't sleep—I'm too nervous."

Her mother drew the sacque closer about her and sat down on the couch.

"Helen, do you know what I think you should do?"

Helen looked up in surprise. Her mother had respected her desire not to discuss Warren in any way. But she instinctively felt she was going to do so now.

"I think it would be very wise if you would take the baby and come home with me for a few weeks' visit."

"Why mother, how could I?"

"Very easily. And it would be the very best thing that could happen for both you and Warren. In all marriages, there comes a time when you get on each other's nerves. And that is the time for a short separation. You haven't been away from him a day since you married, have you?"

Helen shook her head.

"Then it itself is very bad. All married people should have an occasional vacation from each other. Then after a new view point, a better sense of the proportions of things, you grow to magnifying each other's faults and failings. If you stay with them too closely.

"Now make up your mind to come home with me. I've been wanting to suggest this ever since I came. You and Warren are reaching a critical period in your marriage, and to have a short separation now—you may have a very much longer one later on."

"You mean"—— Helen faltered, "that you think in the end we will"——

Suggests a Wise Course

"I mean that just now, dear, you are under constant friction, and that for you to come home with me for a few weeks would be a very wise thing."

"But, mother, you don't think I've grown to magnify Warren's faults, do you? Surely you can't help but see that he is sometimes splendid—and irritable."

"My dear, all men are selfish. The lives of most women are a constant adjustment to the selfishness of the man they love. The thing I do not like in you and Warren, is your radically different temperaments. You long for affection and companionship and he's very cold and undemonstrative. You have always been emotional, and he loathes emotions. And now you have reached the point where you are constantly warring—where you have gotten on each other's nerves. That is why I want you to go away for a while."

"You think that will help?"

"I think it is certainly worth trying."

Helen was regarding her mother with mingled wonder and admiration. "And you have seen all this when I thought you didn't know! When I tried so hard to keep you from knowing how—how things were."

Her mother smiled. "I have seen that, too; that is why I haven't spoken before. And, if I didn't think this trip might help, I should say nothing, even now. For I have never believed that outside interference ever helps married people to solve their troubles."

"But, mother, how could I leave—how could I——"

"Don't Wait Up," She Advised

"Don't talk any more about it to-night. You'll only find reasons for me, going. Just think it over for a day or so. And go to bed now—I wouldn't wait up for Warren any longer. That is never a good plan."

Helen took her mother's advice and went slowly to bed. When Warren came, half an hour later, she pretended she was asleep.

But, until dawn, she lay awake thinking of her mother's words: "If you don't have a short separation now—you may have a much longer one later on."

Would it come to that?

Some Artistic New Lorgnettes

AMONG inexpensive lorgnettes are those in silver, with handsome chasing and an oval space at the top for monogram. The chief objection to this metal is that it rubs off black.

Tortoise shell cases are less conspicuous than gold ones, but are brittle and lose quickly unless kept well rubbed up with chamois and oil. One of the smartest lorgnettes in shell has no carving on its case—only a handsome raised monogram cut from a single piece of shell.

Much better for the eyes are the lorgnettes without the patent folding spring. They are not so fashionable, and therefore are harder to find and more expensive in the gold cases. Usually they must be made to order. Many women consider them clumsy, but oculists approve, as the "spring" variety are constantly getting out of order and changing the focus. New lorgnettes have the large round glasses in a narrow gold rim that fold into carved or chased gold handles. The oval lenses in the small frames are too small to be good for the vision.

Sumptuous, indeed, are the handles. Some of enamelled gold are entirely plain, with only a handsomely engraved monogram. Others have an open-work design, delicately carved in floral or conventional figures.

Lorgnettes in delicate enameled blues, green and violet, with gold filigree, are handsome. Other enamels are plain, with a wreath of detached flowers in a contrasting color as garlands of pink roses on a white green background.

A tiny glove lorgnette, two inches long, is worn on the chatelaine or tucked in the glove.

Jeweled lorgnons in gold, studded with diamonds, turquois, opal, or pearls are as handsome as they are costly. Often the jewels are set in the pencil chain.

With this jeweled lorgnette is worn a long chain of pearls, or white gold or silver, a chain that falls only to the bust. The shorter chain is for more frequent use, a single figure of when a full length lorgnon is carried.

To-day's Best Story

GOLDWIN SMITH in his reminiscences tells of a parson who was much given to the use of big words. One Sunday he frowned down upon the parson's predilection and finally determined to rebuke him.

"Mr. Brush," said he, "I am fully aware that I am not a model pastor in many respects, your Bishop, have no fault to find with you. But the tattle runs that you are inordinately fond of fox hunting."

The rev. Mr. Brush was not dismayed. "My lord," said he "the tattle runs that you are in the habit of attending the balls given by the Queen at Buckingham Palace."

"That is true," replied the Bishop, "but I always stay away before dinner from the dancing."

"For the matter of that," retorted the fox-hunting clergymen, "I am always three deids away from the hounds."

THE WAR IN THE AIR

A Thrilling Story of the Invasion of This Country by a Hostile Sky Fleet

The Battle of the Races for Supremacy. By H. G. Wells. Copyright by the Macmillan Company

Synopsis of Preceding Instalments.

Bert Smallways, an English Cockney lad, is walking at a resort of a man and woman from balloon, is caught in the basket and carried away 10,000 feet into the clouds. He is ignorant of aeronautics. In rummaging about the basket he finds some pistols, photos and letters which show that the man assisted in rescuing was Alfred Butteridge, the great air expert, who has invented the secret of the flying machine, which can sail the air and remain anchored in any spot he chooses.

Bert remembers that Butteridge had offered his great secret to a great fleet of 100 airships to attack the United States, so when they have destroyed way, and the expedition is in the hands of Prince Karl Albert, Identified Kurt is sold off to attend the wants of Bert, in the belief that he is some other Butteridge, the great air wizard. The Prince sends his secretary, the first Von Winterfeld, to interview the supposed Butteridge about his flying machine.

Von Winterfeld makes an offer of a hundred thousand pounds for Butteridge's secret.

"AND now, Mr. Schmallways," he said at last, leaning back and resuming the siege, "tell me how you got hold of Mr. Pontergrae's letters."

When at last the Graf von Winterfeld left Bert Smallways, he left him in an extremely deflated condition, with all his little story told.

He had, as people say, made a clean breast of it. He had been pursued into details. He had had to explain the blue suit, the sandals, the Desert Rerishes—everything.

For a time scientific zeal consumed the secretary and the question of the plans remained in suspense. He even went into speculation about the previous occupants of the balloon.

"I suppose," he said, "the lady was the lady. Was she to see your chits also?"

"It is very curious and amusing, yes, but I am afraid the Prince may be annoyed if I do not write his usual decision—always he acts wis wonderful decision, Napoleon. Directly he was told of your descent into the camp at Dornhof he said, 'Bring him!' Bring him! Is my secretary His schtar of destiny! Yes sen! He will be dthwarted.

"Then directed you to come as Herr Pontergrae, and you but not done so. You but cried, of course, but it has been a poor try. His chaiguents of men are fery quick and right, and it is best to have it set up to them—completely. Especially now. Particularly now."

He resumed that attitude of his, with his fingers interlocked between his knees, fingers. He spoke almost confidentially.

"It will be awkward. I tried to suggest some doubt, but I was overruled. The prince does not listen. He is impatient in the high air. Perhaps he will think his schtar has been making a fool of him. Perhaps he will think I haf been making a fool of him." He wrinkled his forehead and drew in the corners of his mouth.

"I got the plans," said Bert.

"Yes; there is that! Yes, but you see the prince was interested in Herr Pontergrae because of his romantic self. Herr Pisterage was so much more—ah—in the pictures. I am afraid you are not equal to controlling the flying machine apparatus of our aerial park as he wished you to do. He had promised himself that.

"And de was also the prestige—the world prestige if Pouterage with us. Well, we must see what we can do." He held out his hand. "Give me the plans."

A terrible chill ran through the being of Mr. Smallways. To this day he is not clear in his mind whether he wept or no, but certainly there was weeping in his voice.

"Eh, I say!" he protested. "Ain't I to 'ave nothin' for 'em?"

Bert in a Tight Place

The secretary regarded him with his novelent eyes. "You do not deserve anything," he said.

"I might 'ave 'ore 'em up."

"Zey are not yours."

"They weren't Butteridge's?"

"No need to say anyzing."

Bert's being seemed to tighten toward desperate deeds. "Gaw!" he said, clutching at the seat. "Ain't there?"

He palm," said the secretary. "Listen. You shall haf five hundred pounds. You shall haf it on my promise. I will do that for you, and that is all I can do.

"Take it from me. Gif me the name of that bank. Write it down. So! I tell you the Prince is ha choke! I do not think he approfed of your appearance last night. No; I can't answer for him. He wanted Pouterage, and you for sooth! You see! Then I do not understand quite. He is in a strange state.

"It is the excitement of the starting and this great soaring in the air. I can not account for what he does. But if all goes well I will see to it you shall haf five hundred pounds. Will that do? Then gif me the plans."

"Old beggar!" said Bert as the door clicked. "Gaw! What an old beggar! Sharp!"

He sat down in the folding chair and whistled tunelessly for a time.

"Nice old swindle for 'im if I fore 'em up! I could 'ave."

He rubbed the bridge of his nose thoughtfully. "I gave the whole blessed show away. If I'd jes' keep' quiet about being Enonymous. Gaw! Too soon. Bert, my boy; too soon and too rushy. I'd like to kick my silly self. I couldn't 'ave kep' it up. After all, it ain't so bad," he said. "After all, five hundred pounds. It ain't my secret, anyhow. It's jes' a pickup on the road. Five 'undred. Wonder what the fare is from America back 'ome."

Before the Prince.

And later in the day an extremely shattered and disorganized Bert Smallways found in the presence of the Prince Karl Albert.

The proceedings were in German. The Prince was in his own cabin, the end room of the airship, a charming apartment furnished in wickerwork, with a long window across its entire breadth, looking forward.

He was sitting at a folding table of green baize, with Von Winterfeld and two officers sitting beside him, and fattened before them was a number of American maps and Mr. Butteridge's letters and his port folio and a number of loose papers.

Bert was ordered to sit down and remained standing throughout the interview. Von Winterfeld told his story, and every now and then the words balloon and Pouterage struck on Bert's ears.

The prince's face remained stern and ominous and its two officers watched it anxiously, or glanced at Bert. There was something a little strange in their scrutiny of the Prince—a curiosity, an apprehension.

The Prince Asks Questions

Then yesterday he was struck by an idea, and they fell discussing the plans.

The prince asked Bert abruptly in English, "Did you ever see this thing go up?"

Bert paused. "Saw it from Box 'ill, your royal highness."

Von Winterfeld made some explanation.

"How fast did it go?"

"Couldn't say, your royal highness. The papers, leastways the Daily Courier, said eighty miles an hour."

They talked German over that for a time.

"Couldn't it stand still? Up in the air? That is what I want to know."

"It could cover your royal highness, like a wasp," said Bert.

"Viel besser, mein wahr!" said the prince to Von Winterfeld, and then went on in German for a time.

Presently they came to an end, and the two officers looked at Bert. One rang a bell, and the portfolio was handed to an attendant, who took it away.

Then they reverted to the case of Bert, and it was evident the prince was inclined to be hard with him.

Von Winterfeld protested. Apparently theological considerations came in, for there were several mentions of "Gott!" Some conclusions emerged, and it was apparent that Von Winterfeld was instructed to convey them to Bert.

Accused as a Spy

"Mr. Schmallways, you haf obtained a footing in this airship," he said, "by disgraceful and systematic lying."

"Awful systematic," said Bert. "I——"

The prince silenced him by a gesture.

"And it is within the power of his highness to dispose of you as a spy."

"Eh?" I came to sell——"

"Sell," said one of the officers.

"Herr Pouterage, in consideration of the happy chance that made you the instrument under Gott of this Pouterage flying machine reaching his highness' hand, you haf been spared. Yes; you were the bearer of good tidings. You will be allowed to remain on this ship until it is convenient to dispose of you. Do you understandt?"

Bert opened his mouth to ask about the 500 pounds, and then a saving gleam of wisdom silenced him. He met Von Winterfeld's eye, and it seemed to him the secretary nodded slightly.

"Go," said the prince, with a sweep of the great arm and head toward the door. Bert went out like a leaf before a gale.

The Flagship

But in between the time when the Graf von Winterfeld had talked to him and this alarming conference with the prince, Bert had explored the Vaterland from end to end. He had found it interesting in spite of grave preoccupations.

Kurt, like the greater number of the men upon the German air fleet, had known hardly anything of aeronautics before his appointment to the new flagship. But he was extremely keen upon this wonderful new weapon Germany had assumed so suddenly and dramatically. He showed things to Bert with a lavish eagerness and appreciation. It was as if he showed them over again to himself, like a child showing over his toys.

"Let's go all over the ship," he said with zest. He pointed out particularly the lightness of construction, the use of interlinked aluminum tubing, of springy cushions inflated with compressed hydrogen. The partitions between bays were covered with light imitation leather.

The very crockery was a light biscuit glazed in a vacuum and weighed next to nothing. Where strength was needed there was the new Charlottenburg alloy, German steel as it was called, the toughest and most resistant metal in the world.

There was lack of space. Space did not matter, so long as load did not grow. The habitable part of the ship was 250 feet long, and there were decks in tiers. Above these one could go up into remarkable little white metal turrets with big windows and air tight double doors that enabled one to inspect the vast cavity of the gas chambers.

This inside view impressed Bert very much. He had never realised before that an airship was not one simple, continuous gas bag containing nothing but gas. Now he saw far above him the backbone of the apparatus and its big ribs, "like the neural and buccal canals," said Kurt, who had dabbled in biology.

"Dandy!" said Bert appreciatively, though he had not the ghost of an idea what these phrases meant.

Little scarcity lights could be switched on up there if anything went wrong in the night. There were even ladders across the space. "But you can't go into the gas," protested Bert. "You can't brave it."

Gas-Tight Diver's Suits

The lieutenant opened a cupboard door and displayed a diver's suit, only that it was made of oiled silk, and both its compressed air knapsack and its helmet were of an alloy of aluminum and some light metal. "We can go all over the inside exciting and stick up bullseyes or leaks," he explained. "There's nothing inside and out. The whole outer case is rope ladder, so to speak."

Aft of the habitable part of the airship was the magazine of explosives, coming next to the middle of its length. They were all bombs of various types, mostly in glass. Some of the German airships carried any guns at all, except the small pompom, to use the old English nickname dating from the Boer War, which was forwarded by the gallery upon the shield at the heart of the ship. From the middle of the ship, too, covered canvas gallery, with aluminum tracks on its floor and a hand rope, ran back underneath the gas chamber to the engine room at the rear.

IN THE NICK OF TIME TO SAVE A LIFE AND AT THE SAME TIME GET SOME REAL FILM FOR OUR CAMERA
SAVED! SAVED!
IN THE MORNING THE BATTLE-SHIPS WILL DO A LITTLE TARGET PRACTICE
THE END

Claude did not invite Desmond and Gongota, the wild man, to come into his boat, but they don't mind a little thing like that. On the contrary, they'd rather go where they are not invited than where they are. Now that they have Claude and Rosamond in their power, what do you suppose they are going to do with them?

Well, for one thing, they are putting Claude ashore on a small island inhabited solely by savage gorillas. Some people think gorillas are harmless. Just because they look a little bit like human beings, but that's no argument. Desmond looks more like a human being than a gorilla does, and he's anything but harmless.

One of the gorillas has already grabbed Claude and is about to bat his head against a tree. Pipe the way he swings out unfortunate hero. Doesn't he remind you of Cuney at the bat? If you could get that guy in a baseball game and he ever landed on the ball, he could run around the bases till the cows came home.

But here's where Mister Boa constrictor gets in his deadly work. He wraps himself around both Claude and the gorilla and holds them fast. Claude is saved so far as the gorilla is concerned, but snakes are just as bad. As for us, we wouldn't give two cents for our brave hero's chance of escaping alive and unharmed.

Just at this thrilling moment a bunch of circus men appear on the scene. They are scouring the jungles for animals to add to the World's Greatest Aggregation of Zoological Wonders. Here's where they have a chance to capture a gorilla and a boa constrictor at one fell swoop, incidentally, they'll have to rescue Claude.

The scene changes. 'Tis night. Desperate Desmond has tied Rosamond to the back of a floating target which the British warships are going to shoot at in the morning. Not to-morrow morning, for that will be Sunday. The target practice begins Monday morning, and our pictures will show whether those British gunners are any good.

How to Improve the Arms

ONE of the rare attractions a woman can possess is a well-molded, white and tapering arm. Its charm is so great its magnetism so insistent, that one wonders why more women do not strive to obtain it, particularly in this day of sleeveless gowns.

Yet how often one is shocked by the sight of red, fleshy arms or scrawny, muscular ones. Women seem to have no shame about their ugliness and display them with the utmost indifference, with only a wisp of tulle or a strap of metal lace for coverings.

The girl who wishes to possess attractive arms can do much to improve them, but she should be very careful about how she indulges in physical culture exercises, or else she will cultivate an upper arm that is a mass of prominently defined muscles.

On the other hand, the thick, fleshy arm between shoulder and elbow is equally repulsive. It corrects one's appearance successfully, for it has a way of developing as one leaves the bounds of youth.

There are a few facts that should be remembered by her who intends to give careful study to the improvement of the arms. To try to improve a thin forearm by exercise is only to render it more bony and muscular. It should literally be fed with oil and cream. This also will have an excellent effect upon rough and discolored elbows. Women who have many girls possess elbows that are a disgrace.

One of the best means for developing attractive arms is to bathe them night and morning with cold water. This stimulates circulation and the application of rubbing with a coarse towel to get them dry renders them delicately plump.

'Tis Sad

'TIS sad to part from friends whom we had dear,
Though be a few short months, much more a year.
None knows what ill may happen in a week,
Or in a day. So tears roll down my cheek
In parting, for misfortunes that I fear.
Alas—for I am iffy, sickly near—
When, at my toilet, on my head appear
Gray hairs, and sons in quite a widened streak.

'Tis sad to part.

All-parting's sad, but that of worldly gear,
The good green dropsyts, has the least of cheer.
The fellow who repays one is unique.
He'd stay well to a sideshow as a freak
And so I sigh. The reason is most clear;
'Tis sad to part.

USE FOR OLD SLIPPERS.

When dancing shoes and bath slippers are too soiled and worn-looking they may be covered with new silk or satin, and will, if neatly done, look quite new again. A pattern of the shoe upper must be taken in paper and laid on the material, cut out and lightly basted on the shoe, the lower edge bound with narrow silk or satin ribbon to retain material. A fancy ornament, bow or rosette can be put on the toe of the shoe to give a smart finish, and no one will be the wiser when the shoes appear in public. This idea is a great boon to young ladies, who go out a great deal.

The Mystery of a Dancer Who Defied a Metropolis

A Story of Love and Tragedy by E. Nesbit

"YES," said Denny, and the violin broke into silence. "Yes, that was the song of worship. Only I'd got it in the minor. You see, it's all the same thing. And so is the first song I played. All that's the bits of my Love Symphony that I've not put into it. The best part, I shouldn't wonder."

"I won't dance any more to-day," she said, and her face was shadowed. "You play better than any one else I know, but sometimes your playing is dreadful. That's that thing. It had the note of doom in it—like Tristan'—"

"I know," said he. "That logic sounds to all the saxophones. But the real note of doom is in my last movements, the one you're to dance the Salome to."

"I hope it'll go all right," she said, "it isn't my idea of the Salome music. It's too triumphant, too alive. The head's dead, you know."

"Yes," he said, "I know. But the triumph's alive. That's just it."

Anxious About the Head

"You're sure they'll have the head ready by Monday?" she asked, to bring him back to lighter things of this world.

"Quite sure—they promised. Are you going to be married, Princess?"

The question came sharp as a pistol shot.

"Yes," she said. "Wish me joy, dear." And she came behind the low seat where he sat. "Kiss me, dear Denny. This is the most beautiful day of my life. Kiss me, and wish me joy."

"Not like this," he said—turned in his chair and sank on one knee—the poor, helpless foot dragging awkwardly behind him, and looked up at her, folding his hands as worshippers fold theirs.

"Now," he said. "Now. Kiss me, Princess, if you will."

And she bent over him, took the golden head in her arms and kissed him on the forehead and on the lips.

Next day she went down to the Wood House. The house looked as it had looked while she was meeting him on the river, when the days were days of magic, and its, at nights, the silent house of joy. Nothing had happened—only a china plate had been broken, and the key of the ice safe mislaid. But there was a plenty of china plates—and the weather had grown bitterly chill, so that iced food was no longer a necessity of life.

On Sunday morning she went about the garden cutting armfuls of flowers, stocks and dahlias. Little red fuchias, from the tall bushes by the door—Japanese anemones, tearoses and tight hard-knots of sweet peas. She must make the house beautiful, for him. Denny was in one of his states and could not help her. So she was busy.

By 2 o'clock the house was a flowery bower, and she herself in a pinky white gown with much lace, that made her look like a rose that has tried to turn into a carnation. Afternoon, he had said. Well—I o'clock was afternoon. By 2 o'clock she was waiting at the window. By 3 she was standing at the gate. Five o'clock saw her in the meadow down by the road—and by 11 o'clock at night he had not come.

By 12 he trod, noiselessly, the garden path—but by that time the Dragon had persuaded her to go to bed. He could not be coming. There was no train that could get in so late. The house looked dark and unwelcoming. He could not know them at that hour and worry them with his excuses and the explanation of his lateness.

"I'd Shoot Him Like a Dog"

He turned away, his forearm noiseless on the grass. A blot of darkness lay to the left. That, he supposed, was the shrubbery in which she had met that brute. His soul flamed with anger at the thought of her, alone—unprotected save by her brave spirit; at bay, and her brave hand on the trigger.

"If I had been here," he told himself, "and had had that pistol, I should have shot him like a dog."

He took the path that led through the shrubbery. A late moon was rising between thick cedars on the lawn. Its beams shone in white lines through the stems of the shrubs. The symphony smelt of Autumn and decay.

Sandra slept brokenly and awoke with dry hands, tired eyes and the sense of something wrong. Yes, he had not come—something had happened. Ah, what could have happened to him?

Her heart leapt and then seemed to stop, and she felt as though she had not had anything to eat for a very long time. She felt a little sick. I think this is what authors mean when they say "her heart sank."

You know the infinite desolating variations that can be played on the simple theme, "What can have happened to him?"—Sandra went through them all da capo, and then all through them again, as she bathed and dressed.

There was a letter, the letter written by Templar after the chain had been riveted on him by his aunt at Waterloo. It had been meant to reach her on Sunday morning. You cannot expect a man who has been out of England for eight years to remember all about country posts. It was a very delightful letter, and told her that though he might be late he would certainly come.

Back to London

It cheered her for a little, till she remembered that it had no bearing whatever on the theme, since, late or early, he had not come. She caught the first train to London. The Wood House was offensively full of flowers, and she was glad to be out of it.

"No, Aunt Dusa, dear," she said. "You must stay here. He may come this morning. I've had a letter saying that he would take a taxi and ride down that way if he couldn't catch the train.

"It may have broken down somewhere, and then he'll come on later. If he does, give him Forrester's address, and this note. Look. I'll put it on the mantel-piece. I've told him to go to Forrester, and he'll bring him to me. I've got lots of shopping to do. He says we are to be married this week. But I say next. Denny can come up by the four-nineteen."

She was glad that she had always insisted on managing everything, when there was no reason why she should impose her will on others. Now that there was a reason the settled habit was useful. It is a good thing to get into the way of ordering people about on all occasions and refusing explanations. It makes them easy to deal with and prevents their asking "Why?" when why is awkward or tiresome.

In the train a new theme mingled with the other. Would there be a letter waiting for her at the house without an address? Or would, perhaps, he himself ? He knew that Forrester came at eight. It would be easy to leave a letter. Or to get Forrester to let him in. No, of course, Forrester wouldn't do that.

She would hear if he had been, when Forrester met her at Charing Cross. As they neared the station she put on the disguising tiresome look and let down her thick sprigged veil.

No Letter from Him

But Forrester was not there. She decided that an omnibus was safer than a cab for a Princess travelling incognito, and thus reached Oxford Circus. She went in through Uncle Mosenthal's house—there was a way, but it was dangerous to use it often.

There was no letter for him.

But hope was so strong in her that when she entered her sitting room it would not have surprised her to see her lover standing there—he might have worked the lift himself. He was an engineer—he could easily have found out how to do things. He could have found some way of raising the trapdoor and making it fast again. It was possible—and what was the use of making difficulties?

She had to open every door and look in every room before she could be sure that he was not there waiting for her. But the rooms were all empty and very orderly and quiet. Agar had done her work early and gone.

There was nothing to show that he had ever been there—nothing to remind her of him—nothing to be seen but the empty room, the empty fireplace, the empty chairs.

The "What can have happened to him?" theme was resumed by the full orchestra of fears and hopes, terror and reason. She walked in and out of the rooms, took things up and put them down again—and all to the thunder of that insistent or tiresome.

It was not the first time by many that she had been alone in The House With No Address. Solitude was, to her as to most persons of genius, at times a necessity. The first time she insisted on being left alone in that strange house, Aunt Dusa's sense of propriety had driven her to an appeal to Mr. Mosenthal. He had supported Sylvia.

"Ah, young girls they love to be alone—it is natural—to dream—to regret the pasts they have not had—to taste the beautiful sadness of the young thing—and to be very sorry for themselves. And nowadays can she so safely alone be, at here—with Uncle Moses in his house all around her. Go where you are sent, my good Dusa, and leave the child to be joyous unchecky. She is Princess here—do not distract her from her art by question-ing her royal commands."

Thus said Uncle Moses, millionaire and incurable romanticist.

She was used to the empty house, and loved the sense of space and freedom conveyed by its inviolate solitude. But to-day she felt shut in, immured. The house that had been the love-nest was now cold and a prison.

She walked up and down, waiting waiting.

Suddenly she stopped, and through the bewildering orchestra the chord of common sense made itself heard.

What was she waiting for? She knew perfectly well that he couldn't come here. Forrester was gone, and besides . . . What could have happened to him? Why—nothing! Some silly bungler had—but yesterday had been Sunday, when there is no business. Well, the music might have come back to love and wedded bliss.

A thousand things might have happened—quite ordinary, harmless things, nothing to worry about or be afraid of. Well, but he hadn't be written? No doubt he had, but letters posted in London aren't delivered in the country till the second post? Why hadn't she waited for the second post? She would go out and telegraph to Denny to bring up the letter if there was one. If course there would be one.

Then the big genius of a Mosenthal can not keep a young woman hidden in London, without allowing her to shop. The ertile, childlike imagination that had poured his success in business of all sorts had found it simple to arrange a way. Sandra must have a disguise. Aunt Dusa, too.

Aunt Dusa's consisted of clothes smarter than her real self was ever supposed in—a "soupcon" of shocking pink and a scandalous red wig. Sandra in disguise—a disguise of her own designing—was a white-haired lady in an old-fashioned hat and veil and a mantle of elegant shabbiness.

To Be Continued Monday.

WE, too, marvel at the flavor of Orange Pekoe. We did not make that flavor. All we did was to find where such tea grew—and put it into our air-tight, parchment sealed canister, so that no breath of its goodness might be lost.

So we cannot tell you whence its flavor came, or what it is. We simply know that it is there, and that there is a difference—and that it is wonderful.

He Had a Strange Infirmity

But Richard's Sister-in-Law Came to the Conclusion He Was Shamming.

"NOW, Brother Richard," said Mrs. Dumble to her husband's brother, who had been visiting for a couple of weeks, "you're always saying that you'll be glad to lend a hand when I need a little help, so I'll call you at your word. I wish you would get the buggy whip and beat that carpet you see on the line in the back yard."

"I hate to refuse you, Mary Ann," said Richard, "but you have asked the one thing that I can't conscientiously do. It seems like a fatality that you should make that particular request. Ask me anything else and you'll see me hustle around on the jump to do it, but beating a carpet is the one occupation at which I must draw the line."

"I don't know just why it is, but whenever I beat carpets I lose all control of myself, and fly into a horrible passion and do things that I regret bitterly afterward.

"The last thus I undertook to beat a carpet was to please a lady friend at whose house I was visiting. Against my better judgement I plodded to her enchantress and got the buggy whip and began beating the carpet, and the next thing I knew four policemen were holding me down and a couple of firemen were turning the hose on me.

"They told me that I ran amuck down the main street of the village and several prominent citizens had been sent to the hospital as the result of injuries received at my hands.

"I always am subject to such attacks when I beat carpets. I can't explain the whys and the wherefores. That is a problem for the psychologists, and a most interesting one, I should say."

"Well, that's too bad. Of course I won't ask you to beat the carpet if it affects you that way. But, if you are determined to help me, suppose you go into the cellar and sort and cut up two or three bushels of seed potatoes. Some boys are coming in the morning to plant them and if I have the potatoes ready they'll get an early start."

"Really, Mary Ann, it is incomprehensible that you should ask me to do the one thing that is intolerable to me.

"Is this chance, fatality or design? Are you a mind reader, that you seem to divine the tasks that I am incapable of doing? I can't explain why it is, but I can't endure the scent of raw potatoes. I have swooned upon several occasions when going into cellars where raw potatoes were stored.

"It is one of those mysterious natural antipathies which baffle analysis. You will remember that Anne of Austria became violently sick whenever the perfume of roses reached her. Many people suffer genuine anguish if they are in the neighborhood of cats.

"I have a woman friend who simply can't stand the sight of rhubarb. Place a rhubarb pie on the table in front of her and she'll froth at the mouth and act as though she had the hydrophobia.

"These things can't well be understood, much less explained, and all we can do is to be generous and charitable and allow for the infirmity in question.

"You shrill you're a consummate fraud, Richard. I notice that your antipathy to potatoes vanishes when they are boiled or fried."

"That's the strange thing about it. Now, if you'd ask me to cut up baked or boiled potatoes for the boys to plant I'd be astonished at my industry, and you'd be obliged to remind me of your unkind words.

"That's the worst thing about psychological infirmity. A man gets no sympathy whatever. Even his sister-in-law calls him a consummate fraud and points the finger of scorn.

"If I cause you here with my leg in a sling and put up a pitiful whine you'd give me all the old clothes in the house and several quarters in money and a square meal and tell me to come again.

"But because my affliction is temperamental, something that you can't apply a poultice to or drop off a plaster cast, you have no sympathy and say things which rankle. Now, if you would read some standard work on psychology—"

"Oh, go along with you! I'll cut up those potatoes myself!"

EDWARD KEMBLE SAYS MELLEN'S TALK IS LIKE A "SOFT SOAP BUBBLE"

"Mr. Mellen's address is like a bubble, merely of soft soap and air, and when the author throws some brightness on it, by means of its fanciful word pictures, it appears somewhat attractive, but prick it anywhere and it will collapse at once.

"The truth is that this elaborate petition, with its picturesque fantasies, has for its main object the crushing out of the proposed Boston & Eastern Railroad. It seems scarcely possible that the Legislature will acquiesce in such a plan."

In such plainness said Edward Kemble, formerly president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, attacks the promises of the New Haven Railroad as to what it will do if the Legislature allows it to gobble up the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn line and connect it with the South Station by a tunnel. He has filed with the Committee on Railroads a vigorous protest against the granting of the New Haven's petition.

Mr. Kemble does not question the good faith and the intentions of the New Haven Railroad, and replies to some of the arguments that were made by President Mellen before the Chamber of Commerce and by Vice-President Byrnes at the State House.

The petition, says Mr. Kemble, is a piece of mere bravado. He asserts that the New Haven Railroad cares no more for the welfare of the community "than for the snap of a finger, excepting in so far as it can control that welfare and make it subservient to its own will and its own interests."

Plan to Crush B. & E. Road.

The crushing out of the proposed Boston & Eastern Railroad, Mr. Kemble says, is the main object of the New Haven's petition.

Mr. Kemble is a retired business man. He has been a close student of railroad and commercial affairs in New England. His brief follows:

"To the Committee on Railroads, Hon. Charles H. Innes, chairman.

"Gentlemen—The petition of the New York, New Haven & Hartford R. R. Co., which is now before a committee of the Legislature, asks for authority to acquire the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad, and then to extend it to Beverly, and perhaps to Salem, and to build a tunnel connecting it with the South Station in this city.

"In favor of this petition the company urges that it 'may standardize the gauge of the Revere Beach road, and develop it whatever that may mean—and 'make a through route from the South Station to Lynn, and thus, incidentally, obtain an opportunity to make a connection with some piers at East Boston, which it hopes the State will build there.

"This petition is in itself an act of great effrontery and in the nature of a piece of mere bravado. There seems to be no limit to the aggressive and grasping policy of this corporation, and it appears to believe there is no limit to the subservience of the State according to its demands; not that it considers this very important, for when they are not granted its practice is to go right on, in defiance of legislatures and law, in carrying out its plans of absorption and monopoly.

"It makes its demand in the supremest confidence with law; beguiles, or attempts to beguile, legislators and public with veiled promises, and grand pictures of what it may do for the greatness and the prosperity of this city and this commonwealth, declares its great desire to serve and to develop, while it goes on, unchecked by intervention or without it, law or no law—in perfecting its schemes for aggrandizement and control.

"Cares Nothing for Community."

"It cares no more for the welfare of this community, per se, than for the snap of a finger, excepting in so far as it can control that welfare and make it subservient to its own will and its own interests. Its projects now are, by means of this petition, to obtain possession of the Revere Beach road and to smother the proposed Boston & Eastern road. In order to secure these objects, it flaunts before us a new tunnel scheme, a grand through route to the South Station to Lynn and Beverly and a building of docks and piers in East Boston.

"It wants the Revere Beach road. There is no doubt of that; but does any one suppose it will build a $12,000,000 tunnel under the Boston harbor to get it? Suppose it does, does any one suppose it will then extend it to 10 or 20 miles to North Shore, when it now already has a line direct from Boston through Lynn and Beverly to the North Shore? Does any one suppose it would build a tunnel which will parallel its present line to the North Shore? Such a supposition is absurd, will never be made in earnest, and yet, it is holding out to this Legislature, and the public, the probability that it will do this if this petition is granted!

"Furthermore, it holds out a bait which Boston always jumps for, by intimating that with a tunnel and the Revere Beach road in its possession, it will then be in a position to make extensive docks and new piers and docks which it thinks the State should build at East Boston, and thus be able, and in the words of its vice-president, 'TO DOUBLE THE EXPORT TRADE OF BOSTON.'

"In the first place, it does not need the Revere Beach road to do this, for it is able to make connection with any piers at East Boston at its Boston and Maine system, already a line of railway running straight from the Boston and East Boston docks to Revere and there joining its main line. So it has access to East Boston now; and it owns a pier there.

"In the second place, is it supposable that this corporation really means or attempts to haul cargoes right past the grand Commonwealth pier, which it has recently leased, and right through its own freight yard, and directly past its own piers, now idle at South Boston, and on through a tunnel to the proposed new piers and docks in East Boston? Is it likely to do this while it has piers of its own at South Boston? Is it reasonable to suppose it will do all this? Even if it can obtain the necessary freight for cargoes, and it is said it will require 500 carloads of merchandise to load one of the ships its vice-president talked about to the committee. But it does obtain the required cargoes; if it has not the necessary connections with the interior of the country—certainly not via its main line—and its main line is the only line which has to do with the proposed tunnel.

"The only working connection it has with the interior is by way of the Central Maine system, which has a connection with the New England Railroad at Herlan, Dam Junction and Troy; and the freight for cities by that route is destined at the Hoosac tunnel docks and the Mystic docks at Charlestown. The Rutland road, which is being taxed about, is nothing now. The Rutland-Maine system has had a connection with it for years. Even if it should meditate connecting the Boston & Maine system with the Rutland road, now State piers—which is not probable—it will not be possible to approve of that, for the Revere Beach road in order to accomplish this.

Attacks Brynes's Statements.

"The vice-president of this corporation delivered a long address before the legislative committees, a large part of which is in support of this petition. It appeared in full in an evening paper which frequently publishes columns of this corporation's matter, and respects it is a remarkable production. It is startling, and to put it mildly, somewhat visionary. It appears to be made up of 'ought to-be's,' 'would,' 'should,' 'will' and 'if' and 'can,' Lynn and Swampscott beaches may be expected to compare with Brighton and English watering places.'

"Express trains are run between Lynn and Revere Beach every fifteen minutes sometimes every ten minutes—under present management; and it is not easy to see how the Winthrop shore, or Nahant, or the Swampscott beaches, can be reached by them under N. Y., N. H. & H. management. Besides, if this corporation wants to make Brighton and Margates out of the Swampscott beaches, it has now its main line of double track, standard gauge, road running right alongside of them.

"He said further:

"'Winthrop, Revere and Lynn will also benefit directly from the connection with the South Station by way of the tunnel under the harbor built to parallel the existing East Boston tunnel. The quicker transit than that by way of the ferry will be worth the additional fare to be charged in compensation for the great additional cost incurred for that improvement. With the Railroad Commission empowered to determine the just rate for this additional fare through the tunnel the amount cannot be excessive at the most.'

Two Fares to Revere?

"It would appear, therefore, that passengers from Winthrop, Revere and Lynn are to be carried by way of the proposed tunnel up to the South Station and an extra charge made for the tunnel passage.

"So there are to be two fares between Boston and Winthrop and Revere and Lynn, one via the ferry, another via the tunnel. The excess of fare via the tunnel, however, is to be passed upon by the Railroad Commission. If future railroad commissioners be like the present one this corporation will probably suffer no detriment under this provision and the commission resulting from two fares for the same service will undoubtedly necessarily the speedy abolition of the ferry. He further says:

"'The effects of the projected improvement upon metropolitan development will be exerted very generally and in like manner upon the entire North Shore section. In terms of transportation Greater Boston will practically be extended to Cape Ann by the swift transit facilities planned for the entire region.'

"This corporation has already a line of double track railway running the whole length of the North Shore to Cape Ann, and as near the sea as a railroad can be built, and the way is already open for the 'swift transit facilities' he speaks of. It seems strange that the little Revere Beach road is necessary to move Greater Boston to Cape Ann. He says further:

"'The current talk about a new ocean terminal at Montauk Point, on Long Island, to accommodate the great ocean liners that are too large for any dock easily practicable at New York makes this the psychological moment for Boston to present more forcefully its superior merits in this regard. Intelligent business organization might now be of immense service by urging upon the public authorities the importance of seizing the opportunity for Boston here presented and also by representing to the steamship companies the exceptional advantages of this port, perhaps even substantially justifying their faith by adequate offers of local support for such steamship services.'

"Does he think the East River and the great Hudson can be moved to Montauk Point? There is no liner yet built nor ever yet designed that may not enter New York harbor and be docked there and there never will be one. Furthermore, the War Department has authorized the extension of piers in that harbor whenever necessary, so 'the psychological moment' he mentions has at least been postponed.

Montauk Point Plan "Absurd."

"The 'current talk' about Montauk Point and the possible removal of the great city of New York and its hundred-million tithes is too absurd for notice, but it is perhaps worth while to notice that this corporation, while he declares if this petition is granted and the State will build more piers, that 'its representatives will double the export trade of Boston,' he does not call upon the business organizations of the city to make 'adequate guarantee of local support for steamship services.'

"I wish I had space at my command for more quotations from this fertile writer."

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

The closing of the Lenten season has brought a marked reduction in the wholesale price of fish. The retail prices have not changed materially as yet, but will probably within the next week. Steak cod, which has not sold below nine cents a pound from the vessels at T wharf more than once or twice since Ash Wednesday, sold for five cents yesterday and a shade under that this morning. Other fish have sold for proportionate prices.

"The price of lobsters has fallen, but is still higher than it ever was at this season of the year. The retail price for good fresh-boiled lobsters is forty cents a pound, which is quite a drop from the price a few weeks ago when a Commercial wharf dealer sold 3000 for a thousand pounds of live lobsters in Portland, but it is about ten cents a pound higher than they sold for last year at this season.

"Egg orange is the latest novelty in tropical fruit. They are the result of hybridizing the Mandarin orange and Florida orange. They are delicious, belying their rough and unin-viting exterior. King oranges sell for 75 cents a dozen.

"Strawberries are plentiful and excellent, as they have been since the Florida season opened. Those now in the market come from the Carolinas and sell for 35 and 40 cents a box.

"NEW HAVEN PLAN FOR REVERE GRAB 'MERE BRAVADO'

This petition is in itself an act of great effrontery, and, in my judgment, a piece of mere bravado. There seems to be no limit to the aggressive and grasping policy of this corporation, and it appears to believe there is no limit to the subservience of the State according to its demands; not that it considers this very important, for when they are not granted its practice is to go right on, in defiance of legislatures and law, in carrying out its plans of absorption and monopoly. — Edward Kemble, in attack on plan of New Haven road to grab the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad.

REALTY SHOW ENDS TONIGHT

The first real estate exposition ever held in Boston or New England closes to-night in Horticultural Hall, after a two weeks' record of big attendances, practical results to the many exhibitors, and the inauguration of a movement for the development of real estate and home building that will be felt throughout Greater Boston for many months to come.

Yesterday was Cambridge Day at the exposition and among those attending last night was Major J. Edward Barry, of the University City; William M. Wadden, chairman of the Cambridge Park Commission; Joseph P. Ford, John C. Quhlan and many other prominent Cambridge residents. Mayor Barry, after a tour through the exposition halls, heartily endorsed the exposition and its educational possibilities, declaring that it was one of the best movements for future real estate development that has ever been inaugurated. He expressed great interest in the four Cambridge exhibits and was greatly pleased when told that some of these exhibits would result in bringing two new factories to the University City.

A feature of the exposition yesterday was the lecture given by Arthur E. Horton of Lexington, a well-known landscape designer, on "Back to the Country—Conservation for the ordinary farmer and gardener."

Business Success Through Publicity

No. 107

A Word to the Advertisers of Textiles.

Now that Congress is determined to take up Schedule K it is a foregone conclusion that the textile mills will wake up and take notice, and it's a safe and sound conclusion that the latter are going to come down a little on Schedule K.

What should the wise manufacturer do? Create a demand for his goods, make his trademark known, and if he hasn't a trademark, get one.

A lowering of the duties means an increase of importation, and the only way in which this can be overcome is making the product of the textile mill so well known in the house that people will ask for the cloth and demand it at the store because of its desirable quality.

The wise textile manufacturer will guard himself against competition of foreign goods by advertising his domestic line. It seems strange that the New England manufacturers, who are so broad-minded in other respects, should be so short-sighted when it comes to protecting their market by advertising or increasing the demand for goods by advertising.

It's just as easy to advertise textiles if the mill will go at it artfully as it is advertising else. It has been demonstrated again and again by dealers of nationally advertised fabrics. But the wise manufacturer procrastinates and procrastinates, puts himself entirely in the hands of the dealer or the jobber, and then hands to high Heaven and hopes that nothing will happen to cut prices or hurt his values.

The day is coming when textiles will be advertised as freely as food products, and when that day arrives the mill owner will find his market very much affected by competition and fluctuations.

Newspaper advertising is the ideal form of advertising for the textile mill. It has the kind of advertising that the department store uses, and if the department stores advertises to draw customers into the store, why shouldn't the manufacturer advertise to send customers to ask for his goods.

We would like an opportunity to confer with any mill owner whose house and fabrics need to be advertised.

The Boston American has a circulation of 400,000 daily. If the department stores find it advantageous to use it, the mill owner will find it effective in making his trademark known and creating a wider demand for his goods. Goods which are standardized by newspaper advertising are less affected by competition.

If you would like further particulars relative to the problem of advertising, address Trade Ad Department, Boston American.

Should She Marry a Red-Headed Man? Yes, Indeed, and Glad to Get Him

Red Hair Is a Sign of Strength, and to Despise It Is a Sign of Foolishness

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Examiner.

A girl writes to Beatrice Fairfax, and by accident her letter reaches this, the wrong desk. It shall be answered in part here. The complete answer and the letter in full will be found later in the regular Beatrice Fairfax article, for Miss Fairfax alone can reply to heart questions adequately.

The girl says she likes a man pretty well and would marry him, BUT he has red hair, and people laugh at him.

The girl wants to know whether she should accept the red-headed man, who is honorable, industrious and able to support her comfortably, or whether it would be wiser to wait and get someone WITHOUT red hair.

This letter, on behalf of red-headed men everywhere, we answer as follows:

Young woman, take the red-headed man, and thank your stars if you are quite SURE that you are worthy of him.

First—Red-headed men make very good husbands, especially if their hair is of that bright, almost pink, red, for with such hair a man is not admired as much as he should be by other women, and so he thinks only of his wife. Red-headed husbands are faithful.

Second—Julius Caesar had red hair—and he was a good enough husband for anybody, although he was rather exacting about his wife, as we know. He was a man to be proud of, one who piled up laurels on his red hair, or, rather, on the bald place where the red hair used to be. He might have worn a crown on that bald place—and would probably have done so had not Brutus made other arrangements.

Third—Thomas Jefferson had red hair, and he wrote the Declaration of Independence, was President, and a very good father and husband, indeed. You would feel foolish, young woman, if you rejected the red hair and discovered too late that it covered the brain of a Jefferson or the ambition of a Caesar.

Fourth—Remember that all of our primitive ancestors of the North probably had red hair once upon a time, so that it is very ancient and respectable. It is often a sign of vitality, which is important in this life of competition.

Fifth—Remember that it is not NOW, while the husband's hair is bright red and the doubtful young lady in the prime of youth, that the husband's qualities are known. Almost any husband is all right for a year or two.

But when you are old the real test comes. You want a husband that will be the right sort when his hair is gray, or gone, and when you, the bride, have a thin place on top of your head, with rats and puffs to hide it. Then you will find out for the first time what sort of husband you really picked out. Red-haired men last well, and when they get old they improve in looks—by losing the red hair. Other men cannot do that.

Sixth—Once a young lady fly married a rough caterpillar. The other flies laughed at her; but he turned into a red, white and blue butterfly—then SHE laughed. It may be so with you and your red-headed beau.

Seventh—Don't marry him unless you really love him, and also respect him, for children are not worth much unless the mother really respects the father. If you do marry him, tell your girl friends that bright pink hair is very red—then THEY will be jealous.

Choosing the Method of Their Extinction

With only sixteen political cave-men in opposition, the resolution for the direct election of Senators passed the House of Representatives, receiving 296 votes—almost 20 to 1.

This newspaper, by a special right, earned in steady battle for this cause, congratulates the new House, which thus promptly puts itself on the side of progress and anticipates manifest destiny.

The question, with its predestined answer, once more—and now for the last time—stands facing the Senate.

Those Senators of the United States who have lived and flourished through the subversion of the principles of free government have now their last chance to choose their method of extinction.

Within a few months the movement for the election of Senators by direct vote of the people is sure to be carried to a successful conclusion. The only question that remains is the question whether the constitutional amendment for this purpose shall be framed by a Constitutional Convention summoned on the initiative of two-thirds of the States—or by the present session of Congress.

For nearly a generation men in the Senate who knew they did not represent the people, and knew that popular elections would destroy their political existence, have resisted this reform.

They have now come to the end of their powers of resistance. For nearly, if not quite, two-thirds of the State legislatures are already on record for a Constitutional Convention—which, if summoned, will be more formidable to the authors and agents of vested privilege than they dare to think.

Thus the euthanasia—or easy death—of Senatorial toryism is to be found in the quick passage by the Senate of the direct election joint resolution that comes to it from the lower house. The Constitutional Convention will thus be made unnecessary.

In framing this Rucker resolution its friends in the House have freed the subject from every false issue. The direct election resolution presented to the last Congress was stopped in the Senate because it complicated the question of the popular election of Senators by an irrelevant question of the respective powers of State and nation in the control of elections. That difficulty has been eliminated in the present measure.

The plain issue being now presented to the Senate, every stubborn opponent of the people's will in that body will stand out as a marked man—with the brand of political doom upon his face.

No Mystery Is Too Baffling for Him

MY HOUSE HAS BEEN STOLEN!
MY DEAR WATSO— NOTHING IS IMPOSSIBLE!
IMPOSSIBLE!
THE HOUSE STOOD RIGHT THERE WHEN I WENT AWAY A WEEK AGO!
SURELY WATSO, YOU CAN SEE THAT THERE ARE NO ASHES HERE!
MAYBE IT BURNED DOWN!
THE HOUSE WAS CARRIED AWAY ON ROLLERS, MR. SHRIMPO,— HERE ARE THE TRACKS!
THE BOLDEST ROBBER I EVER HEARD OF!
FORTUNATELY THERE HAS BEEN NO SNOWFALL TO COVER THE TRACKS!
THE HOUSE IS NOT FAR AWAY — I HEAR THE CREAKING OF THE WINDLASS!
CREAK!!
CREAK!
MR. BONEHEADO, I'M AFRAID YOU'LL HAVE TO PUT THAT HOUSE BACK — YOU'VE MADE A MISTAKE!
WHAT? ISN'T THIS HOTSTUFFO'S HOUSE?
I SHOULD SAY NOT. IT'S MINE! MY NAME IS SHRIMPO!
JUST LIKE BONEHEADO!

Where Is the Money of Long Ago?

By KENNETT HARRIS

WHERE is the money of long, long ago?
Where is the coin that was lavished of old?
Where are those wads of past centuries' dough
Spent by the spenders now mingled with mold—
All those high rollers that rollicked and rolled
Drinking the strong, filling full with the fat?
That is a tale that I fail to unfold:
I haven't got it, I'm certain of that.

Where's the largesse they could carelessly throw,
Ruddy rose-nobles, broad pieces of gold,
Where the gay heralds their trumpets would blow,
Sounding the onset for baronk so bold,
Thrown to the tipsters where catches were trolled,
When at their tankards the prodigals sat,
Beans by the frail Blowselindas cajoled?
I haven't got it, I'm certain of that.

Where are the plunks that the pirates would stow
Down in the depths of the brigantine's hold?
Where is the treasure, does any one know,
Sunken on reefs where the coral has shoaled
All that I get is so sparingly doled,
Barely enough to pay rent for the flat,
Hardly for beaksteak, the price that it's sold:
I haven't got it, I'm certain of that.

L'ENVOI.

Possible person, a trifle bare-polled,
You could inform us, I'll bet a new hat,
You've got the most of it, so I am told:
I haven't got it, I'm certain of that.

He Writes About A Couple of Jokers

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"I THINK the greatest humor of the day is to be found in America," sed Ma. "The musikal comedy that we went to see last nite was a fair exampel. It was rote by a American. It was staged by a American, too, & played by Americans."

I know all of that, Pa sed, but I disagree with you about the greatest humor of the day being found here. To tell you the truth, Pa sed, I think that the English & Germans have us beeten a city block, the long way of the block. Two of my club members is going to drop in 'onite, sed Pa, & I want to watch you laff when they hand out sum of there reel stuff. They are both grate kidders down at the club, sed Pa, they keep the boys in constant roars of loffter. I dount doubt that, sed Ma, if they dident keep the boys in constant roars of laffter, sumthing else wrd. You left all the way upstairs wen you caim hoam from the club last nite.

You dount likim me, do you? sed Pa, I was laffing at the joaks of my two freeds, the Englishman & the German. Aha, Pa sed, here they cum now, & in caim two of Pa's freeds. The German one was awful cheery & happy, he shook hands with Pa and me & he wud have shook hands with the hired girl only Ma fired her the other day. Vee Gates, he sed, it is with gladness that you I greet, all together alreddy. Gans goot, I sed. I was the only one in our family wich knew any German.

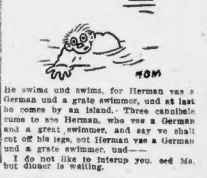
The English feller wich had met Pa at the club put part of his pair of specktacles in his eye, it was only one (1) glass. Oh, listen, I sed to him, you dount have broak one of sure glasses out o' your specktacles wen you was gitting out of the Subway. My word, sed the Englishman.

After Pa had interduced them to Ma & me Pa sed, Lord Chumley, tell us that ripping story about the English poacher wich was caught on your estate. Very wea, sed Lord Chumley, I will relate it. It seems that on my estate in Devonshire, sed Lord Chumley, there was a poacher wich had been working uncaught for sum time. I ran upon him, you know, quite by accident. He had a dozen or more eggs which he had stolen from my peasant nests, golden pheasants, you know, & all that sort of thing. "Eggs?" says I. "Yes," says he, "poached, if you please." I thought it was rawther clever, sed Lord Chumley. You see, he was kidding me. You see, I happenned to have on my evening clothes, and looked rawther like a waiter.

Har har Grass tell us a story. My husband tells me that you are a great enterrainer, Count.

Chass, sed the Count, over by der Rhine I entertain every Christmas all my friends.

But can't you tell us a story, sed Ma. Chass, sed the Count, it is a story about Herman. You see, Herman was a German und a great swimmer. Herman vent by a great oshun steamboate to cross the oshun, und the ship sinks und Hyes is lost, be Herman, who vas a German und a great swimmer, he starts to swim



He swims und swims, for Herman was a German und a grate swimmer, und at last he comes by an island. Three cannibals cums to see Herman, who vas a German and a great swimmer, and say we shall cut off his legs, sot Herman vas a German und a grate swimmer, und——

I do not like to interup you, sed Ma, but dinner is waiting.

That best portion of a good man's life,—
His little, nameless, unremembered acts
Of kindness and of love.

Startling Facts of Science

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN

ALMOST remarkable state, condition or point in nature, the absolute zero of temperature, has been reached to within three degrees. This is considered to be a great scientific achievement. Hydrogen gas was solidified into pure white ice, and this was employed in the process of cooling helium, and all works of the hand of man were surpassed. The temperature sank lower and lower until a point only three degrees from absolute zero was reached, but the obdurate helium did not even flinch.

The imagination, however vivid, cannot encompass what this intense cold implies. It may be the death of the activity of matter—that is, a state of rest so far as chemistry is concerned. Thus, if the true zero of nature can be reached it may obtain that matter will put on new properties, and hitherto unknown properties, or it may expire, become eternally inert, totally devoid of heat and lifeless.

Still even then the standing mystery ever confronting man, always awaiting explanation, gravitation, will act. Nothing known can affect the universal attraction, forever directly as to mass, whether hot or cold.

However, the three degrees may never be overcome, or, indeed, they may. For it is now thought that science has no limits, the scientific mind being capable of solving all problems—so sayeth some mentologists.

The capital problem is first to discover what mind is, then life, next gravitation, next electricity and reach a climax in finding how it is that gaseous masses glow and issue light when existing in frigid voids at zero absolute.

There is no solution in sight at present for any of these perplexing problems and harassing. No progress whatever has been made in finding what mind is, the reason being doubtless that mind is unable to think of itself. On trial it will soon be discovered that one is unable to set up a train of reasoning regarding his own or another's mind. "His own" implies an owner, but no fact as to who this owner is has ever been discovered. Humans are not perfect.

The Royal Astronomical Society in England has a bar, a standard yard in length made in 1833. The British Government has the real standard in a vault. The two have been compared, with these results:

In 1854 the R. A. S. yard was .000376 inch longer than the standard; in 1855, .000420 inch longer, and in 1902 it was .001050 inch longer. Thus from this the length of the R. A. S. bar is increasing. This is baffling also. The standard may be decreasing. Who knows? Metal may be changing specific speed of atoms and electrons.

It has been proposed to use another method of making permanent the standard yard, fool or meter by use of waves of light, but, these tiny waves may also be changing lengths, so there seems not to be anything absolute except mathematics. In this perfection there may arise trouble. This call the universe a unit; then all things whatever are decimal fractions. The universe may be expanding or contracting: if so, the unit is variable. And the quantity of matter may be increasing. This, of course, is unknown by man, but none holds to the idea that matter is decreasing, for it is thought that matter is indestructible. It may resolve back into primordial electrons, but then the word matter could not be applied.
